INTEGRATED PERSONNEL SERVICES INDEX (IPSI)

The Integrated Personnel Services Index (IPSI) is a semi-annual index which announces and organizes selected materials from all sources relevant to counseling and personnel work. It is published by the ERIC Counseling and Personnel Services Information Center (ERIC/CAPS).

The Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) program was initiated by the Office of Education, United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. ERIC is a nationwide information network for acquiring, selecting, abstracting, indexing, storing, retrieving, and disseminating the most significant and timely educational research reports and projects.

The developmental work for this publication was supported through a contract with the U.S. Office of Education. Publication support is provided through The University of Michigan.

This publication was prepared pursuant to a contract with the Office of Education, U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Contractors undertaking such projects under government sponsorship are encouraged to express freely their judgment in professional and technical matters. Points of view or opinions do not, therefore, necessarily represent official Office of Education position or policy.

SCOPE: ERIC/CAPS is responsible for the collection and analysis of materials and research reports relating to the preparation, practice, and supervision of counselors and other personnel workers at all educational levels and in all settings. Included are materials describing theoretical development; the use and results of personnel procedures such as testing, interviewing, disseminating, and analyzing environmental information; group work and casework; and reports on program development and evaluation. Included also are materials which deal with the nature of pupil, student, and adult characteristics; descriptions of education, occupational, and community settings; and discussions of the types of assistance provided by personnel workers is such areas as career planning, family consultations, and student orientation activities.

SUBSCRIPTIONS: Subscriptions to IPSI are available from the ERIC/CAPS Center at the rate of $9.00 per year (two issues). See the ordering form here in this issue for complete details.

INTRODUCTION

The need of the counselor for current and valid information relevant to the tasks he faces is ever present. A typical counselor will use those resources which are most readily available—the journals to which he subscribes, newsletters, and fellow counselors in whom he has confidence regarding their knowledgeability.

CAPS has been working to develop resources which supplement the counselor's previous informational resources. CAPS aims to develop resources which facilitate, both through content and format, the most effective utilization of information available to the counselor. The Integrated Personnel Services Index (IPSI) is another tool in the arsenal of the counselor and student services specialist.

We see IPSI as being a resource which has wide applicability—from intensive searches on specific questions to a current awareness and updating function. Its two major features, the breadth and depth of the research and journal literature covered, and the use of the ERIC indexing system, make it a resource equally applicable to the needs of the practicing counselor or the student services researcher.

The staff and physical resources devoted to the preparation of IPSI might well be justified on just the production of the comprehensive index to the knowledge base in counselling and student services which IPSI is. We are, however, intrigued by the possibilities which IPSI will afford us to analyze and interpret needs and developments within the student services. In Volume 4, we intend to continue the index part of IPSI and to expand its usefulness with the addition of a new major section on information analysis. In the new section we will analyze the trends, developments, and innovations which are covered in each issue of IPSI and review and discuss their importance and implications for counselors and researchers. In addition, IPSI will serve as a basic source for the development of a wide range of new informational CAPS products.

I encourage your response to IPSI, but I especially invite you to acquire and use it as a means of improving your perception of, and response to, the problems which confront us.

Director

HOW TO USE IPSI

The entries in the Resume Section of IPSI are selected through a comprehensive scanning process which involves four major types of information sources. These are: ERIC documents, doctoral dissertations, journal articles, and books.

Each entry is first listed in the RESUME SECTION. Complete bibliographical information, including availability of the original article, document, etc., and a brief abstract of the entry is given. (To order documents, check "How to Obtain IPSI Materials" below.) Entries have been assigned a number in order of their appearance to facilitate cross-referencing.

Entries are then listed (by title and entry number) in the SUBJECT INDEX. Each entry is listed several times according to the descriptor terms which have been assigned to it. A list of these terms is provided on page viii of this introductory section to assist you in selecting terms which represent your area of interest. The arrangement of terms in the Subject Index is alphabetical. To obtain a complete description of each entry, use the entry number to refer to the Resume Section.

Finally, entries are listed in the AUTHOR INDEX for your convenience in locating additional papers or articles by a certain author. The listing of authors is arranged alphabetically. Again, only entry number and title are given for the materials listed under each author's name. The entry number may be used to refer to the actual listing in the Resume Section.

Since IPSI offers a large and comprehensive display of entries, we suggest that you use it in one or both of the following ways:

TO SEARCH FOR INFORMATION -

1) Select terms which describe the area for which you would like to locate information. For instance, if you are looking for information on "drug use in junior high school's," you might link it with the following words:
   - behavior patterns
   - drug abuse
   - socially deviant behavior
   - adolescents
   - delinquents
   - legal problems
   - junior high school students
   - secondary school students
   - student subcultures
   - delinquency prevention
   - health education

   At this point in your search, it is probably best to identify as many descriptor terms as possible. The subject groupings on pages viii through xi will help to identify these terms.
2) Using the terms which you have selected, search the Subject Index section of IPSI. Write down the entry numbers of the titles which appear to relate to your search area. Then, using the entry numbers, refer to the main entry section for a complete bibliographical entry and abstract.
3) From the abstracts, determine the entries which apply to your search area. Obtain a copy of the original document, article, etc. by using the availability information provided with each entry.

TO STAY AWARE OF CURRENT LITERATURE -

1) Scan the Subject Index to locate areas and titles in which you are interested. Keep a running list of entry numbers and titles.
2) Using the list of entry numbers and titles, refer to the Resume Section for the complete bibliographical entry with abstract.
3) With the availability information provided in each entry, order or refer to any articles, documents, books or dissertations which seem of particular interest to you.

HOW TO OBTAIN IPSI MATERIALS

Since IPSI is, in essence, a stepping-stone in your search for materials, we have attempted to give availability for all materials which are listed. In most cases it is possible to obtain a personal copy of the title listed. The sources fall into four groupings -- the same as the four divisions of the Resume Section. They are as follows:

ERIC Documents -

Most documents which have been listed by ERIC are also available from the ERIC Document Reproduction Service in either microfiche or photo copy form. Prices and order ("ED") numbers are given with each entry. In some cases, alternate availability is given.

An ordering form and instructions for ordering EDRS-reproduced documents are provided in the pages following the Author Index.

Doctoral Dissertations

All dissertations which are listed in IPSI have been drawn from Dissertation Abstracts, a publication of University Microfilms. They are available in microfilm or photo copy from University Microfilms.

To order, give the following information:

1) Order number (precedes author's name in the listing)
2) Author's last name and initials
3) Type of copy desired (35 mm positive microfilm, or soft-or hard-bound xerographic copies)
4) Your name and address (list separately for billing and shipping, if they are different)

Send your order to University Microfilms, 300 North Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48106.

Do not send payment with your order; you will be invoiced at the time of shipment. Necessary handling and shipping charges will be included.

Journal Articles

Journal articles are available from the original journal in library or personal collections. Refer to the entry for volume and page designations.

Books

Books are available through libraries and private collections only. Publisher information is given.

RESUME SECTION

The following sections include bibliographic information and annotations for the four major types of information resources announced in IPSI. These four resume sections are ERIC Resumes, Dissertation Resumes, Journal Resumes and Book Resumes.

(1) ED 035 805 BREAKTHROUGH FOR DISADVANTAGED YOUTH. Washington, D.C.: Manpower Administration (DOL), 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-Not available from EDRS. Available from Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402 ($2.00) 253P.

Descriptors - Counseling Services, Disadvantaged Youth, Federal Programs, Manpower Development, Program Evaluation

Evaluations of 55 early (1963-66) experimental and demonstration projects conducted in 18 states and the District of Columbia under the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 are organized under eight headings: impact on the community; recruitment and community penetration; testing, counseling, and supportive services; basic education; prevocational vocational training programs; job placement, creation, and development; using nonprofessionals; and research activities and problems. (LY)

(2) ED 035 814 Harter, Donald. WHY SUNY STUDENTS FAIL TO COMPLETE INDEPENDENT STUDY COURSES. 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 37P.

Descriptors - Adults, Dropouts, Motivation, Student Problems

College credit, career related skills, self-improvement, and certification or college degree requirements has been the leading motive for enrolling; major reasons for discontinuing involved instructors and administrative procedures, followed by low motivation, poor learning orientation, other demands on one's time, changes in one's plans, and course content. No close relationship was seen between the two sets of reasons. Findings showed among other things, a need for better student counseling. (Author/LY)

(3) ED 035 835 Willmarth, John Gary. FACTORS AFFECTING THE VOCATIONAL CHOICE OF WOMEN OF DIFFERENT AGES SELECTING CLERICAL AND SECRETARIAL OCCUPATIONS. Pullman: Washington State University, 1969. Not available from EDRS. Available from University Microfilms, 300 North Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48106 (Order No. 69-14,477 MF-$3.00 Xerography-$4.20) 80P.

Descriptors - Age Differences, Employment, Females, Intelligence, Occupational Choic

The factors considered were: health, intelligence, interests, previous work experience, stated reasons for present occupational choice, knowledge of employment opportunities and job requirements, influence of parents, teachers, counselors, caseworkers, and friends, and the socioeconomic status of the women's husbands, parents, and friends. Results implied that younger women were likely to be more interested in the career aspects of a job, while older women were likely to be more interested in the immediate conditions and rewards surrounding the job because of their concern for such things as a need for money, the state of their health, and a desire to obtain additional family luxuries. (Author/NL)

(4) ED 035 895 Yoesting, Dean R.; and Others. CAREER DECISION-MAKING PROCESSES OF IOWA YOUNG ADULTS. FINAL REPORT. SOCIOLOGICAL STUDIES IN EDUCATION. SOCIOLOGY REPORT 77. Ames: Department of Sociology and Anthropology, Iowa State University of Science and Technology, 1968. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 44P.

Descriptors - Aspiration, Career Choice, Decision Making, Rural Areas, Youth

Study results indicated the following: (1) more females than males migrated from home communities; (2) males had a higher degree of congruency between occupational aspirations and attainments than females; and (3) occupational attainments were related to socioeconomic background, parents' education, migration, and educational aspirations and attainments. (EK)

(5) ED 035 897 Rogers, Mary Brown, and L'Abate, Luciano. BIBLIOGRAPHY OF PLAY THERAPY AND CHILDREN'S PLAY. Atlanta: Child Development Laboratory, Georgia State College, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 26P.

Descriptors - Bibliographies, Child Development, Emotional Problems, Play Therapy, Psychotherapy

The references listed are: (1) journals; (2) dissertation abstracts; (3) books; (4) reports; and (5) monographs. The main subjects covered are: (1) children's play; (2) psychotherapy with disturbed children through the medium of play therapy; and (3) various aspects of child development, both normal and abnormal. The materials listed date from 1925 to 1968. (EK)

(6) ED 035 899 Hogan, Robert and Others. PERSONALITY CORRELATES OF UNDERGRADUATE MARIJUANA USE. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 15P.

Descriptors - College Students, Drug Abuse, Individual Characteristics, Personality, Psychological Characteristics, Psychological Patterns

Four conclusions were reached: (1) marijuana use can be predicted with fair accuracy; (2) users and non-users are indistinguishable with regard to their secondary education, extracurricular activities, or athletic participation. They differ, however, in fraternity membership, academic major, year in school, and scholastic achievement; (3) users show a personality pattern somewhat at variance with many stereotypes, while they are in some ways anti-social, they are characterized by value traits as well; and (4) the character structure of non-users is not necessarily superior to that of users. (Author/EK)

(7) ED 035 901 PUPIL PERSONNEL SERVICES IN AMERICA'S SCHOOLS. Conyers, Ga.: Rockdale County Public Schools, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 61P.

Descriptors - Counseling Services, Health Programs, Pupil Personnel Services, School Psychologists

The Pupil Personnel Services (PPS) Demonstration Center in Conyers, Georgia, held a seminar which brought together public school personnel and college personnel in the areas of counseling, psychology, social work and health. Discussed are PPS programs, problems, predictions, and a description of the Rockdale County Model. (KJ)

(8) ED 035 904 Kilgo, Reese Danley. THE USE OF THE EDWARDS PERSONAL PREFERENCE SCHEDULE IN PRE-MARITAL AND MARRIAGE COUNSELING. Huntsville: Alabama University, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 12P.

Descriptors - Behavior Patterns, Counseling Effectiveness, Individual Needs, Marriage, Test Interpretation

The 15 personality variables are presented with a brief description of the meaning of each item. Methods of interpretation are presented including: (1) there is no "good" or "bad" score; (2) both the socially desirable and undesirable context of each term is variables; and (4) involving the counselee in explaining his ideas of the results. (KJ)

(9) ED 035 907 Dunn, James A. PROJECT PLAN: GUIDANCE THROUGH THE INSTRUCTIONAL PROCESS. THE ACCOMMODATION OF INDIVIDUAL DIFFERENCES IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF PERSONAL PROGRAMS OF STUDY. Washington, D.C.: American Institutes for Research; American Personnel and Guidance Association; American Psychological Association, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 18P.

Descriptors - Developmental Guidance, Guidance Objectives, Individual Needs, Individualized Programs, Vocational Development

Project PLAN is designed to make vocational programs fit the needs of individual learners, and the problem of how such a curriculum can be implemented is discussed. In addition to individualization of what is to be learned and amount of exposure to learning matter, individualization must also be based on the student's learning style; for example, on the various ways in which the content to be learned may be studied. The paradigm for the development of a PLAN program of studies for secondary school is summarized. Guidance is an integral part of the project, and will be developed over the next few years and prototype 1 will implement the educational and vocational counseling effort by attempting to make the educational system vocationally and learner relevant. (RSM)

(10) ED 035 908 Sugarman, Jule M.; and Others RESEARCH RELATING TO CHILDREN. Washington, D.C.: Children's Bureau Clearinghouse for Research in Child Life, Children's Bureau (DHEW); Social and Rehabilitation Service, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-Not available from EDRS. 149P.

Descriptors - Bibliographies, Children, Cultural Factors, Health Services, Social Services

Reports of research are divided into eight sections; (1) long-term research; (2) growth and development; (3) special groups of children; (4) the child in the family; (5) socioeconomic and cultural factors; (6) educational factors and services; (7) social services/ and (8) health services. (KJ)

(11) ED 035 909 Jones, Allan P. SELF-REPORTED AND JUDGED PERSONALITY, VALUE, AND ATTITUDINAL PATTERNS: A COMPARISON OF USERS AND NON USERS OF LSD-25. Boulder; Institute of Behavioral Science, Colorado University, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 18P.

Descriptors - Attitudes, College Students, Drug Abuse, Personality Assessment, Values, Socially Deviant Behavior

The main assessment tool used was the in-depth interview. The user was characterized by an alienation from conventional society and its values, a lack of commitment to a formal organized religion, a searching for values, a lack of clear goals, and a certain psychological ineffectiveness. The study was limited by a difficulty in developing and defining dimensions which cut across all of the groups and the use of a sample drawn from a population varying little between users and non users. (EK)

(12) ED 035 910 Spuck, Dennis W.; and Stout, Robert T. PREDICTING COLLEGE SUCCESS AMONG MINORITY YOUTH: AN ANALYSIS IN HIGHLY SELECTIVE COLLEGES. Claremont, Calif.: Claremont Graduate School and University Center, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 12P.

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, College Students, Mexican Americans, Minority Groups, Personality Assessment, Prediction

Selected sets of cognitive and personality measures are used as predictor variables, and the concept of college success was enlarged to include student ratings by professors and student self-ratings, in addition to college grade point average. Results presented are indicative rather than conclusive. They include: (1) cognitive measures, such as those in the ability cluster used in this study, are highly questionable predictors of future college success in minority populations; (2) non-intellective measures, such as personality variables, may be useful as predictors in minority populations and further emphasize the need for research in this area. MF-$0.65 HC-Not available from EDRS. Available from National Education Association Publication Sales, 1201 16th St. NW, Washington, D.C. (Single copies free) 46P.

Descriptors - Alcoholism, Drug Abuse, Health Education, Health Programs, Health Services, School Nurses

This monograph consists of statements about problems confronting schools today, their implications for the school nurse, and rationales for the nurses' role in attempting to resolve these concerns of children and youth today. The primary responsibility of the school nurse is to promote health and help in preventing disease and thus she must serve in various capacities such as health appraiser, counselor, health educator, liaison person, and researcher in order to accomplish the objectives of a health program. Descriptors - Communication (Throught Transfer), Emotional Development, Perception, Self Concept, Sensitivity Training

Encounter groups are particularly appropriate for the person who experiences a "loss of family," who is lonely often, and sad in his being in society. The encounter group represents a substitute family, a safe place to experiment with new behaviors. However, it does have limitations. It is for those who are for the most part free of profound and chronic psychological difficulties. The trained leader always makes certain that each person's integrity and his readiness for insight is protected. The changes following an encounter experience are an increased sensitivity and awareness of self, and a concomitant increased awareness in others and their sensitivities. (KJ)

Descriptors - Activism, Social Factors, Student Alienation, Values, Youth

Today's youth is demanding to be heard in a way that few other youth generations have before. Some of the general societal forces which have led to this situation deserve some mention: (1) the extension of adolescence; (2) a demand for credentials but little respect for what few they have; (3) the continual erosion and disenfranchising of the community and the American family unit; (4) changing roles of fathers and mothers; (5) the presence of "the Bomb"; (6) the encouragement to think for oneself rather than blind obeisance; (7) hypocrisy; and (8) a lack of community spirit, and feelings of group solidarity. The premise that cigarette smoking is hazardous to health is the basis of this study. The purpose of the study was to cause a shift in behavior from the "presmoker" or "smoking experimenter" toward the "nonsmoker" rather than the smoker. A pilot study was conducted using a five lesson unit on smoking education. Three different approaches were used: (1) the individual approach; (2) the peer-led approach; and (3) the teacher led approach. Results indicate: (1) the teacher led approach appeared to be most effective in situations where good discussion was possible, peer led was more effective in smaller size classes; (2) regular classroom teachers were more effective; (3) girls made a more significant change toward non-smoking than boys; and (4) in general, the five lesson experimental education unit changed attitudes and beliefs about smoking. Our main difficulty in bridging the generation gap and establishing and maintaining effective communication with youth is our failure to recognize that the accelerated pace of change has resulted in young people being members of a culture substantially different from our own. A guilt has developed in the younger generation because they feel morally compelled to achieve social justice. Young people have not developed and cannot develop effective solutions for our social problems. But they do have sharp insight into certain truths which most of us cannot or will not see. The way to communicate with the young is to stay young and alive, to be loving, and to be willing to let the young share in a more vigorous leadership and drive towards achieving more humane and mutually respectful human relations and more effective social justice. Some of the uses discussed are: (1) scheduling; (2) student record systems; (3) research; (4) retrieval; and (5) simulation. Problems relevant to computer usage include: (1) who should decide what information should be placed in a computer student file; (2) incorrect information or machine error; and (3) lack of currency in computer information. Solutions may be use of: (1) a staff team to decide what information goes into a students file; (2) yearly check of each file for accuracy; and (3) schools should participate as part of a shared data bank in order to safeguard confidentiality. One useful scheme for thinking about change describes it as a level or phase of behavior within an institutional setting, not as a static "habit" or "custom," but as a dynamic balance of the institution. Driving forces or those raising the level of production are listed. The application of this theory to student personnel work is explained through a diagram of degree of identification of student activities with institutional intellectual objectives. The three major strategies for achieving change are: (a) increasing the driving forces; (b) decreasing the restraining forces; or (c) a combination of the two (Author/KJ)

Descriptors - Elementary School Students, Environmental Influences, Smoking

Based on the results of the tests, the following conclusions were offered: (1) cigarette smoke which accumulates in poorly ventilated enclosures increased the heart rate, blood pressure and amount of carbon monoxide in non-smoking elementary school children; (2) the smoking environments effect upon the non-smoker in the environment is similar to the cigarette smoke's effect on a smoker but on a reduced scale; (3) non-smoking elementary school age children from non-smoking homes react in much the same manner to a 30 minute exposure to a smoking environment as do non-smoking elementary school age children from smoking homes. Descriptors - Achievement, Adolescents, Educational Environment, Self Evaluation, Smoking, Student Attitudes

The extent to which smokers as compared to non-smokers recognize their failure to achieve was studied. Both male and female smokers did not feel that they came as close to meeting their parents' and schools' expectations as did the non-smokers. The two groups however failed to show any significant differences in perceiving themselves as living up to the expectations of their peers and themselves. If it were possible to downplay smoking and at the same time broaden the potential for achievement to enable more students to increase their feelings of self-worth, smoking might become a less necessary crutch. Descriptors - Dropouts, High School Students, Persistence, Prediction, Youth

Thirty-three characteristics were selected from a review of the literature as being related to high school withdrawal and an individual discrimination function coefficient was ascertained for each of the variables. It was demonstrated that school dropouts can be predicted at a high level of accuracy by use of multiple discrimination analysis and that characteristics of dropouts from one high school may be used to predict dropouts at another high school with varying degrees of accuracy. Descriptors - Aspiration, Community Colleges, Counseling Effectiveness, Educational Objectives, Higher Education, Junior College Students

It was hypothesized that an intensive counseling program for sophomores would enable students to achieve their primary junior college goal of earning the AA degree. The experimental group was given an intensified counseling program while the control group received the regular amount of counseling. It was found that additional counseling of prospective graduates increased the graduation rate, but the specific factors in the counseling process that contributed to this increase could not be ascertained. Conclusions drawn include: (1) students who are considerate of others, warm, and have positive expectations of others can insulate other students from becoming dropouts; (2) the "responsibility" variable which include dependability, self-control, and industriousness, has a strong relationship with academic achievement; (3) appropriate study atmosphere is one of the most frequently expressed concerns of students; and (4) many students feel alienated from the administration. Descriptors - Child Development, Children, Concept Formation, Individual Differences, Learning

Differences found in the study were due to age, sex, and nursery school attenders. Conclusions drawn include: (1) the higher the I.Q. of a child, the more likely he is to be consistent in his choice of perceptual mode; (2) perceiving and conceiving by color are indicative of immaturity, lack of nursery school experiences, lower I.Q. and possibly creativity; (3) form perceivers are best able to conceive by form whereas color perceivers are better able to conceive by color. Five null hypotheses were proposed within the general problem: Are academic achievement, self-discipline, self-concept, sex-role identification, and attitude toward school (authority) different for junior high boys and girls who are grouped by sex, as opposed to those group together? Conclusions drawn suggest that all five of the null hypotheses tested were supported by the treatment of analysis of covariance. The findings were that girls in general have a more positive attitude toward school, receive better grades and achieve higher in school studies related to language arts, irrespective of age, grade, or assigned group. Twenty-two items relevant to institutional morale were selected from the College and University Environment Scales and used in the development of the morale scale. The scale was scored to yield a morale score for each of the Colleges in the sample and normative data were obtained using Pace's group of one hundred institutions, which reflects a broad cross section of American higher education. Significant correlations were found between morale and 37 institutional variables and this provides some support for the validity of the scale. (Author/RSM)

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Achievement Tests, Elementary School Students, Individual Characteristics, Learning

This paper reports three studies designed to determine if significant increases could be made in the prediction of elementary school pupils's academic achievement by adding personality measures to intellectual measures after mental age and intelligent quotient leveling. A fourth study examined the utility of leveling pupils on socioeconomic factors. The personality variables were Locus of Control (LC), Evaluative Styles (ES), and Incentive Orientation (IO). Leveling procedures revealed significant correlations between achievement and both LC and IO for pupils of below average and very high intelligence, respectively, but when conducted in different schools, failed to repeat those relationships. Different schools appear not to be reliable determinant of the relationship between personality and achievement. Socioeconomic leveling effects the relationship between these two variables. The general purpose was to demonstrate by means of a pilot project what could be accomplished by providing guidance and counseling services conducted by itinerant counselors. A total of 432 boys and 397 girls were reached by the Project. Two custom designed walk-in buses were purchased, each equipped with a counseling office, work space around a table, and storage space for tests and occupational information materials. Evaluation criteria were: the degree of acceptance by school administrators, stimulation provided to participating schools, and the impact made upon state level guidance services in Illinois. The project was judged successful. (Author)

This report discusses achievement motivation and productivity (the number of words written in achievement motivation stories). The achievement motive measure is shown to have low reliability, so the major part of the report deals with productivity. Productivity is higher for girls than boys across all schools, and is lower in rural than in urban schools. Race per se, with social class and IQ controlled, is not a significant source of variance. Productivity may be a good indicant of academic socialization. (Author)

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, American Indians, Dropouts, Followup Studies, High School Graduates, Student Characteristics

Three studies--a dropout study, a high school graduate follow-up study, and a 4-year longitudinal study of academic achievement--are synthesized in the document. Examined are family characteristics, high school student characteristics, post high school experiences of graduates, and opinions of high school graduates. Recommendations aimed at (1) correcting deficiencies in basic communication skills; and (2) improving educational opportunities for Indian students. (SW)

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Elementary School Students, Motivation, Negro Students, Transfer Students

This is an extensive study of Ann Arbor's first school desegregation effort, involving the 1965 closing of Jones elementary school and subsequent reassignment of its predominantly Negro population to predominantly white schools. The research focused on the first year of school desegregation, exploring academic, social, behavioral, and attitudinal characteristics (1) in the children transferred from Jones, (2) in a racially mixed group from Mack School (with no change in school setting), and (3) in predominately white receiving-school children. At the end of a year of desegregated schooling, half the transfer pupils showed 5 or more points gain in IQ and 37 percent showed normal or greater gains in reading. However, gains made by the transfer group were smaller, on the whole, than gains made by the other two groups. (Author)

Descriptors - Academic Performance, Counseling Effectiveness, Counselor Characteristics, Perception, Study Habits

Due to various analysis problems it was concluded that only the client perceived dimensions of counselor optimism and responsibility were significantly related to counseling outcome. The findings offer support for the proposals that the successful counselor is one who uses his "unique self" effectively, especially if his unique self is responsible and optimistic. (Author/RSM)

Descriptors - Culturally Disadvantaged, Mexican Americans, Parent Attitudes, Preschool Children

The factors of child competence on which this study focused were behavioral adjustment and linguistic ability. Analysis of the child competence data reveals a moderate relationship between behavioral adjustment and linguistic ability. Analysis of familial data and the child competence data suggests more adequate family adjustment and more favorable "semantic structure" regarding school-related concepts in the H-H group. (MH)

Descriptors - Migrants, Program Descriptions, Program Evaluation, Reading, Testing

Specific areas covered are year-round compensatory education programs for school age children, inservice education programs for teachers and para-professionals, school orientation for children, and preschool education efforts. Programs designed to meet the needs of transients in education and to provide education for them on a continuing basis are outlined. (DK)

Descriptors - Cultural Factors, Ethnic Groups, Junior High Schools, Negroes, Self Concept

Results indicated that of the 14 indices of self concept assessed by the TSCS, 4 scores were affected by the ethnicity variable. However, total self concept score was not significantly different for the three ethnic groups or for socioeconomic position. Male subjects had higher self concepts than female subjects with regard to physical appearance, health, skills, and sexuality. (TL)

Analysis of the questionnaire indicated that level-of-living was the main factor influencing educational plans for both students and their parents. Girls, non-members of rural youth organizations, and students from the two upper level-of-living groups value education more highly than do boys, members of youth organizations, and students from the low level-of-living group. This bibliography is a supplement to a series of five review papers and annotated bibliographies on the school dropout and programs relating to the reduction of the problems of the early school leaver. The selectivity of this compilation relates to items focusing entirely on the school dropout or having several chapters or sections dealing with the dropout in the larger context of environmental deprivation. No journal articles have been included in this listing. It has been recommended that this bibliography should not be used without reference to the earlier five annotated bibliographies, since it is held that every effort was made to avoid duplication. Data on personal, social, educational, psychological, and life characteristics of the women were collected through a questionnaire. The variables--major satisfactions for participation in continuing education, type of program undertaken, scores on the Buhler Life Goals Inventory, Socio-economic status, level of verbal ability, and level of formal education--were used. The latter three were control variable. Women who did not participate in continuing education scored higher on two of the three factors related to the self-limiting adaptation motivation tendency. No significant difference occurred in the factors comprising the creative expansion, upholding the internal order, and need-satisfaction motivational tendencies. (Author/NL)

In an optimal situation, the learning therapist educates the child in a psychological environment that is most conducive to developing the maximum potentialities inherent in the child. The counselor or learning therapist must recognize his own limitations and shortcomings. If he remains alerted to his own dynamics in relationship to those of the student, they will not impair his working with the student, but rather represent a potentially significant influence on what is achieved in the counseling or teaching situation. Descriptors - Counseling Services, Elementary School Counselors, Guidance Personnel, Models, Role Theory

For purposes of the role model, elementary school guidance is viewed as both a concept (philosophy) and as a process (implementation). The process is the action or the implementation by which the concept or philosophy is realized. One aspect of the process which deals with services is predominantly the responsibility of the elementary school counselor. The counselor role encompasses direct and indirect services: the direct is the counseling experience and the indirect services are usually through instruments, as in testing. (KJ)

Descriptors - Behavior Change, Change Agents, Psychotherapy, Role Theory, School Psychologists

A new "Clinical Restorative" model is proposed which takes advantage of the knowledge and desirable features of the old model but also incorporates new knowledge and direction. This model would allow the psychologist in the schools to work with those students not reached through classroom consultation or through school wide or community wide intervention programs. He would act as a direct agent of behavior change rather than a consultant. The school psychologist operating under this model could utilize: (1) family therapy; (2) encounter groups; and (3) assessment if necessary. (KJ)

Several points are made: (1) The Occupational Outlook Handbook needs to be read and interpreted rather than just handed out; (2) too much material is outdated; (3) many materials are biased and need to be replaced; (4) counselors should read all material before passing it out; (5) career conference days need revision so students can attend more meetings; (6) use alumni and students for current job information; (7) the two-week unit on occupations taught by a disinterested person is a great source of misinformation, and (8) a course in occupations taught by a counselor can be made very worthwhile. An outline of a minimum program of occupational information for a high school or college included. (KJ)

The research is concerned with conceptual learning in disadvantaged children. The tasks presented consisted of inductive concept problems. Subjects were provided with various experiences and the effects of these procedures on concept learning were observed. Results indicate that compared to middle class children, lower class children are deficient in both discrimination learning and concept identification. Results also indicate that lower class children are responsive to a variety of procedures. Apparently, certain conceptual deficits of lower class children can be eliminated through the provision of training in discrimination learning. (KJ)

Descriptors - Counseling, Occupational Guidance, Personality, Simulation, Systems Approach

The total systems approach to guidance and counseling is an attempt to help the student understand the personality of the environmental systems in relation to his own personality. The Bartlesville System proposes that game models be constructed to teach systems logic and concepts. The gaming approach emphasizes the responsibility of the individual in constructing his personal value and moral system in relationship to his environment. Descriptors - Adolescents, Emotionally Disturbed, Family Counseling, Psychological Patterns, Psychotherapy

This model of treatment is based on the premise that the disturbed adolescent is the symptom bearer for both marital and family pathology. Focus on the adolescent's behavior and idiosyncracies by the family serves to hide the marital and family pathology. Only when the family has made some strides in defocusing their attention from the adolescent and is able to begin dealing with the hitherto denied pathology in the family is the recommendation of group therapy for the adolescent made. Descriptors - Activism, Counselor Functions, Counselor Role, Identification (Psychological), Student Subcultures

In a search for the causes of student unrest, it is difficult to separate basic causes from the spoken and rationalized causes. Some of the primary causes are: (1) dissatisfaction with the "system"; (2) the quest for identity. The informed counselors have begun to prepare their schools and students for a world of unease by: (1)listening carefully, (2)communicating the real issues; (3)being a sounding board; and (4)maintaining contact with students. When over-demonstration seems imminent, a counselor can: (1) establish trust on both sides; (2) define the problem or need; and (3) cause each side to sharpen their definition of goals and objectives. Involved were 35 schools where the counselor, principal and two randomly selected teachers responded to a Role Expectation Questionnaire and individual interviews. The findings include areas of agreement and disagreement in regard to the counselor's role. The suggestions for the elementary school counselor are the elimination of conflicting expectations of their functions, analysis of specific functions, review of a role expectation questionnaire and discussion of the questionnaire and the setting up of workshops in sensitivity training for counselors. Descriptors - Activism, Curriculum, School Role, Student Needs, Student School Relationship

Students' legitimate demands need to be responded to. This calls for a searching look at what the school's job is and the development of a positive course of action to give leadership to the new student voice. There is also a need for student development emphasis within the schools. Lastly, there is a need for massive reform in the curriculum. Changes should include: (1) learning resource centers; (2) more and different offerings, particularly in vocational areas and work study programs; and (3) forums on contemporary issues. (KJ)

This paper focuses on: (1) the current status of the literature related to the standards for admissions, selective retention, and student involvement in program development and evaluation; and (2) identified areas in need of additional research in relation to these same three areas in the standards. Descriptors - Elementary School Students, Pupil Personnel Services, Self Concept, Student Attitudes

Results indicate that students generally like their school, believe the rules of their classroom are just about right, are willing to obey them, and believe they are doing about as well as other students in their classrooms. Students believe their classmates would rather play than work, that school is important to their future, and that school is teaching them to prepare for a job or teaching them things they need to know when they grow up. Also suggested is the fact that about a third of the students are dissatisfied with school, would prefer not to attend school, are not aware of their teacher's evaluation of their school work, and feel that their achievement is less than satisfactory. Descriptors - Culturally Disadvantaged, Mexican Americans, Preschool Children, Preschool Education

Three groups, each consisting of 16 three-year-old children, were involved in a nine month program. The programs were evaluated by: (1) a non-verbal I.Q. test; and (2) a measure of the child's receptive language functioning. Findings reveal that children who score below national middle class norms when tested on standardized instruments requiring language, test at about national norms on standardized instruments which do not require the use of language. The study tests four hypotheses derived from the proposition that positive self-concept is partly due to an ability to utilize self-initiated verbal reinforcement. The results show positive relationships between (2) self-concept and children's belief that they are responsible for their academic success; (2) self-concept and verbal fluency; (3) self-concept and positiveness of thoughts designated as "good-to-say-to-myself-while-doing-schoolwork;" and (4) self-concept and positiveness of self-divided statements chosen to say after completion of an academic task. Descriptors - Ability, Evaluation, Individualized Programs, Testing Programs

A developed abilities performance battery (DAP) has been constructed based on the Project Talent Survey to serve two major functions in the guidance area of Project Plan. The first function is to enable teacher, parent, and student to realistically evaluate the student's present level of developed performance of ability. The second function of DAP results is to provide detailed profiles of those abilities which a student must cultivate in order to reasonably expect attainment of a particular goal. If the student decides to continue pursuit of the goal an individualized Program of Studies (POS) is generated for him to monitor the educational experience which he will receive during the school year. The content is determined in part by empirically obtained relationships between certain instructional elements and improved ability to perform on components important to the student's goal. (KJ)

Descriptors - Counseling Effectiveness, Evaluation, Guidance Objectives, Research Design

Outcome research has generally overlooked the problem that main effects of treatment may have little meaning in the presence of interactions, and that variables not represented in research designs have no opportunity to demonstrate their interactive effect. A greater variety of research strategies must be utilized to create and empirically evaluate specific treatments for particular clients-especially those which combine the rigor of the experiment, the relevance of the intra-individual replication study, and the richness of the longitudinal project. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Educational Environment, Elementary School Students, Self Concept

The experimental school was heavily oriented toward a humanistic approach to education and stressed success experiences for all children, elimination of academic failure and yearly retention, and maximum freedom for exploration. A neighboring elementary school with conventional grade levels and self-contained classrooms, was selected for comparison. Students enrolled in the experimental school evidenced greater self-esteem than students enrolled in the comparison school, and as grade level increased so did measured differences in self-esteem between the two groups of students. Prolonged exposure to the innovative school environment had a positive influence on the professed self-esteem of children from ages eight to twelve. (Author/MC)

Descriptors - Adolescents, Disadvantaged Youth, Rural Youth, Self Concept, Urban Youth

Factorial analysis of variance revealed that the disadvantaged feel less adequate in social interaction than did the non-disadvantaged. On seven other aspects of self concept no class differences existed. The disadvantaged "rural non-depressed" experienced the greatest negative self concept. In general, it is very difficult to generalize on self concepts of the need to treat the group as heterogeneous rather than homogeneous. (CJ)

Descriptors - Feedback, Learning, Performance Factors, Problem Solving

The three types of feedback were right wrong (RW), nothing wrong (NW), and right nothing (RN). The three levels of task complexity were defined in terms of number of irrelevant stimulus dimensions. The RW condition yielded significantly better performance than the other feedback conditions. The findings have implications for programmed learning regarding the merits of right and wrong feedback signals. (Author)

Descriptors - Achievement, Behavior Change, Elementary School Students, Interpersonal Relationship

The purpose of this study was to: (1) determine whether or not interage grouping of elementary students results in significacant gains in achievement in reading, arithmetic, and English; (2) determine the degree of emotional security developing in interage classes; and (3) determine changes in social climate in interage classrooms. Results revealed that: (1) no significant differences in achievement gains occurred when comparisons were made for the experimental and control schools; (2) no significant differences occurred in any class; (3) no significant differences occurred in shifts of interpersonal choice levels; and (4) no significant differences between interage and control children in test responses to the Test Anxiety Scale occurred. A study of delinquency, underachievement, and dropout in six school districts considered extent and contributing factors within the school setting. Underachievers were identified by classification by grade and sex into IQ groups and grade point averages; approximately one-third of the students were thus rated underachievers. As a result of the data, one district planned a Title III project to provide personal and group identity and to meet the needs of underachievers. (JD)

Descriptors - Behavior Patterns, Higher Education, Performance Factors, Personality Assessment, Resident Assistants

The nature of a residence hall program depends more on the values and behavior of the resident assistants than on the principles and structure of the system. It is important to select appropriate personnel. Any selection process is based on two assumptions: (1) the difference between a successful and less successful performance can be evaluated; and (2) there are observable behaviors that can be used to predict future performance. Through job analysis, criteria of performance can be defined. (AF)

Descriptors - College Students, Counseling Effectiveness, Discipline, Higher Education

The major objectives were to see if the academic achievement, attrition rate, and the disciplinary recidivist rate of students would be affected by special attention and counseling techniques. Findings indicated that there were no significant differences among the GPA means of the group, nor were there significant differences in attrition rates or later disciplinary referrals. Because of the changing nature of the college scene, these attempts at working with disciplinary problems are now generally handled by student disciplinary boards. (AF)

Descriptors - Interest Tests, Junior Colleges, Vocational Counseling, Vocational Interests

A comparison of the Kuder Occupational Interest Survey (KOIS) and the Strong Vocational Interest Blank (SVIB) was made by the General College of the University of Minnesota to determine which of the tests was more relevant to the vocational and occupational concerns of junior college students and more helpful from the counselors' point of view. Over half the students found the KOIS more helpful and 18 per cent preferred the SVIB; 27 per cent were undecided. The counselors found the KOIS more valuable in eliciting information from students, although they preferred the SVIB as a counseling tool. Results do not clearly indicate the superiority of either test. (Author/RC)

Several court decisions relating to student rights and privileges are considered, particularly in the light of student unrest that is now extending to junior colleges. Brief examples from court cases concerning student discipline are given. Junior colleges should incorporate due process procedures into the rules and regulations of the college. These should be prepared by the administration and approved by the faculty and trustees, then published in the catalog and student handbook so that every student has an opportunity to be aware of them. Descriptors - College Attendance, Dropouts, Junior Colleges, Persistence, Student Attitudes

Reports on student attrition have questioned academic aptitude as a predictor of perserverence in college, and thus other factors are sought to explain who drops out and why. Student-related factors involve an interplay of actual and perceived ability, family and school background, and motivation. College-related factors begin with the student's introduction to the school and depend on his adjustment to faculty, curriculum, and school mores. A closer link between community colleges and secondary schools would be an initial step in decreasing college dropout rates. (RC)

Descriptors - College Freshmen, Dropouts, Junior Colleges, Personality Assessment, Student Characteristics

A compilation of selected research on students in higher education is presented along with a review of two studies on personality and demographic characteristics of junior college students. General findings emphasize: (1) the importance of family environment in determining student persistence; and (2) the length of exposure to higher education as being conducive to personality change. Specific instruction refers to the teacher's knowing: (1) what to teach and when; (2) what not to teach and why; and (3) when to let the preoperational child be "wrong." It is argued that instruction can be more specific in some ways, as in the teaching of social knowledge, and in the structuring of cognitive processes that will eventually result in logical thinking. Piagetian principles of learning seem to indicate that teaching must take into account the preoperational child's total cognitive structure even when the content and strategy of teaching are specific. Study objectives were to find out whether the use of disadvantaged women as parent educators of indigent mothers of infants and young children: (1) enhanced the development of the infants and children; (2) increased the mother's competence and sense of personal worth; and (3) contributed to the knowledge of the home life of infants in the study. Study findings were that: (1) paraprofessionals can be used to teach mothers; (2) a parent education program should be part of a comprehensive system of social change; (3) concrete, specific stimulation exercises are a sound curriculum approach; (4) how a child is taught may be more important than what he is taught; and (5) standardized techniques for measuring learning and development are needed. Pupil behaviors were isolated to assess the degree to which pupils: (1) receive; (2) respond to; and (3) value a stimulus--in this case the teacher. Teacher behaviors were categorized as either tension-reducing or tension-increasing for pupils. Results indicated a significant relationship between teacher and pupil behavior and there is a significant relationship between pupil classroom behavior and pupil cognitive behavior as measured by a standardized test. Descriptors - Changing Attitudes, Educational Change, Rural Youth, Vocational Education

The theme running consistently through this speech is that the supportive services to vocational education, to be effective, must be viewed in a sociological context. It is concluded that no problem as complicated as the coordination of supportive services in vocational education can be solved without a considerable amount of work and dedication. (DB)

Descriptors - Bibliographies, College Admission, Disadvantaged Youth, Higher Education, Minority Groups

This annotated bibliography focuses on: (1) civil rights and access to higher education; (2) programs and practices in higher education for the disadvantaged; (3) characteristics of disadvantaged students; (4) college admissions and guidance; and (5) the Negro College. A majority of the items listed are journal articles, both in the main section and the addendum. (RJ)

(239) ED 038 484 COUNSELING THE URBAN POOR. Albany: Bureau of Guidance, New York State Education Department, 1970. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 22P.

Descriptors - Counseling Programs, Counseling Services, Disadvantaged Groups, Economically Disadvantaged, Urban Environment

This publication is designed as a briefing for personnel working at all levels in agency programs focused on serving the disadvantaged sections of the urban community. Described are the productive activities of counselors staffing these programs and the supervisory rationale stated. A counseling program designed to meet the needs of the urban poor, it is held, must provide a way for people to make sense of their total experiences; a logical and economical way to do this is to assume responsibility for coordinating activities and providing many needed services. Descriptors - Admission (School), Bibliographies, Interest Tests, Prediction, Success Factors, Vocational Education

The study indicated that noncognitive, or behavior characteristics of workers, are not only important to success but may be determining factors. Teachers, supervisors, administrators and other specialists tend to agree that prediction and selection should take place at the eighth or ninth grade level and that it should be based on non-cognitive as well as cognitive characteristics of the student. Descriptors - Administrative Personnel, Community Programs, Employment

The manual was designed primarily for use by coordinators responsible for developing comprehensive community youth opportunity programs of employment, education, and recreation. Contents consist of five sections, covering: (1) planning; (2) employment; (3) education; (4) recreation; and (5) transportation, with each section providing information on the role of the coordinator within the facet of the program, funding and resources, reference materials, and program examples. Listings of various contacts helpful to youth coordinators are appended. (AW)

(242) ED 038 499 Turner, B.A. OCCUPATIONAL CHOICES OF HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS IN THE SPACE AGE. Houston: Texas Southern University, 1964. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 84P.

Descriptors - High School Students, Negro Students, Occupational Choice, Vocational Counseling

The study is intended to assist vocational counselors, and to provoke thinking among high school students, especially Negroes, which will result in more realistic career planning. Data obtained by questionnaire from 2,012 seniors enrolled in 18 high schools revealed unrealistic occupational aspirations of many students. Using census data, characteristics of the population and occupations are provided for reference in realistic career planning and vocational counseling. (CH)

Descriptors - Disadvantaged Youth, Educational Research, Records (Forms), Vocational Education

This preliminary report examines eight vocational and technical education programs for disadvantaged youth both in the state of Massachusetts and in other states. The study showed that special programs for the disadvantaged in vocational education are seriously limited in that experimental design, efficient data collection, and evaluation procedures are lacking. The national trend is a movement away from specialized vocational-technical schools to comprehensive high school programs which include vocational training in the curriculum. (BC)

East Lansing: Michigan State University; Carson City: Division of Vocational, Technical and Adult Education, Nevada State Department of Education; Reno: College of Education, Nevada University, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$6.58 197P.

Descriptors - Educational Needs, High School Students, Occupational Choice, Vocational Education

Some major conclusions and recommendations were: (1) within limits, students going to work or to vocational-technical schools can be identified; (2) there is a trend in secondary schools to provide more vocational orientation classes and fewer classes for job entry; (3) there is little that can be done in small schools to provide vocational programs in depth to meet the needs of their students; and (4) there is a need to redirect almost half of the students who say they plan to go to college and enter a profession into the occupations that require less than a college degree. Descriptors - Business, Educational Programs, High Schools, School Community Relationship.

Although it is too soon to expect conclusive evaluation of the partnership programs, some patterns have emerged which should prove valuable to future associations. This report covers: (1) history of the cooperative school, (2) what partnerships are; (3) what happens to a partnership; (4) how to start a partnership; (5) evaluation of program; and (6) some preliminary conclusions. A summary of projects in 30 partnerships, catalog of companies and schools, a company's agreement, a partnership plan, methods of study, an interview guide, and a sample questionnaire are appended. Descriptors - Behavior Problems, Environmental Influences, Student Characteristics, Urban Areas

This paper describes and categorizes the characteristics of disadvantaged urban children with behavior disorders which may have some deleterious effect on their learning, and discusses the several kinds of activities which a comprehensive program of guidance for such children would entail for a specialist in guidance services. The relevant characteristics are: (1) contradictory attitudes toward self; (2) higher incidence of utilitarian or materialistic attitudes than in more privileged groups; (3) low level of aspiration or motivation in relation to academics as well as to some social norms; (4) differences in learning styles; and (5) hypermobility. The areas of activity considered important for an effective guidance program are: (1) appraisal; (2) prescription; (3) support; (4) orientation and interpretation; and (5) counseling relative to role choice and implementation. Retention (in this paper) refers to the time that a former hard core member stays on the job. The hard core need special assistance to get a job and to keep it. Special problems such as lack of transportation, financial roadblocks, legal entanglements, ill-health, inadequate child care, and supervisory hostility may interfere with job retention. Specific details in each problem area along with practical solution possibilities, often community resources, constitute the body of this report. (DB)

Conducted during 1968, this study was concerned with factors that induce enrollees to remain in NYC or to leave it. The study pioneered in a method of quantitative observation of enrollees and work groups in field situations, and is based on what enrollees and work groups actually did and said and how this affected enrollees during this time in NYC. The author views drug abuse in terms of dependence rather than addiction, and as being either physiological or psychological. The primary focus is on prevention, which is considered a total community problem because it necessarily involved youth and adults. The author encourages classroom drug education, effective law enforcement, dissemination of information concerning the legal penalties for selling or possessing dangerous drugs and community-wide coordinating committees for planning programs and avoiding duplication of services. Non-transfer students from a racially mixed school and comparable socioeconomically and academically to the children from the desegregated school were used as a control group. The data included information on a variety of behavioral and attitudinal characteristics. Findings indicated that these characteristics were initially poorest in the black transfer group and there was no evidence that established patterns were altered appreciably by a year of desegregated schooling. It is concluded that desegregation is no panacea for the ills of the minority group child. (Author/RSM)

Descriptors - Decision Making, Drug Abuse, Health Education, Social Problems, Student Subcultures, Youth

A drug abuse education program was implemented in grades five, seven, and nine in the Baltimore City Public Schools. Unit plans outline the curriculum content and learning activities for each of the three grades. Throughout the program the students are recognized as participants and are encouraged to share ideas, think logically, and arrive at valid conclusions. Descriptors - Anxiety, Concept Formation, Creativity, Individual Needs

The study deals with the motivational characteristics which relate to divergent thinking and tests the hypotheses that no significant difference with regard to their fluency, flexibility, originality or combined divergent thinking scores exists between children with high and low need for approval, high and low anxiety, and approval needs and anxiety. Some conclusions were: (1) the hypothesized results were obtained only when originality was used; (2) need for approval was found to be negatively related to originality; and (3) the relationship between anxiety and originality approached significance in the direction predicted. Descriptors - Concept Formation, Creativity, Problem Solving

Four main problems are discussed: (1) no single widely accepted theory of creativity exists; (2) there is a lack of understanding of the implications of the differences in assessment procedures; (3) researchers, on the one, hand, view creativity as entirely a cognitive process or, on the other hand, entirely as a complex set of personality traits; and (4) some difficulties of assessing creative problem solving relate to the heterogeniety of the tasks that have been employed. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Perception, Underachievers, Verbal Communication

The study focuses on the possibility that the tendency of academic underachievers to respond in terms of all inclusive language is indicative of their incapacity to discriminate the uniquely meaningful aspects of their environment. The authors hypothesize that academic achievers would differ significantly from academic underachievers in their capacity to discriminate between verbal stimuli of differing levels of meaningfulness. In the spring of 1969 over 6,000 students in grades four through six responded to a 72 item questionnaire. Of the 72, 11 include responses which suggest possible alienation of this age group. Each school's pupils produced a unique pattern of responses to the 11 items, which suggests that the immediate school environment is one contributing factor to the amount of alienation and the topics which generate feelings of alienation. It appears that schools might better serve pupils who are now experiencing alienation. (KJ)

Measures used were the Dogmation Scale, Gough-Sanford Rigidity Scale, California F Scale, and the Canadian Opinionation Scale. Results showed that neither the factor scores nor the raw scores from the measures proved to be strong predictors of academic performance as represented by grade point average. The Project Plan Educational system includes six principle components: (1) an extensive informational program describing the opportunities, roles, and activities for which the student might prepare; (2) ability and interest testing; (3) a series of units and practical exercises designated to develop skill in decision making; (4) a means to assist the student in formulating his personal goals; (5) a way of helping each student plan an educational program to enable him to achieve these goals; and (6) a system to develop the student's skill in managing the program of development which will enable him to carry out his educational plans and achieve his life goals. This paper describes the first Component of PLAN's Guidance Program. The five basic assumptions underlying Phase I concern the role of guidance within PLAN's educational system. In line with these assumptions, direct attention is being focused on seven goals: (1) orienting new students to PLAN; (2) assisting students to improve their listening, study and test taking skills; (3) providing students with a broad base of information; (4) helping students determine personal interests and abilities; (5) assisting students and parents in formulation of their goals; (6) developing individualized programs of study; and (7) providing for the transition from high school with basic military, college, and post-high school counseling. Descriptors - Intelligence Tests, Parent Attitudes, Parent Child Relationship, Socioeconomic Status, Test Results

The question discussed is: if middle class children and lower class children were matched on the basis of scores on an intelligence test, would one social class group achieve its scores on a different item set than would the other social class group? Results showed that children from middle class did not get their scores on the intelligence test by responding to items in a different set than did the matched group from the lower class. (KJ)

Factor structures and first semester grade point average validities for several college ability test scores are compared for regularly admitted freshmen and for freshmen admitted to the Special Educational Opportunities Program (SEOP) at the University of Illinois in September, 1968. Most students in the special program were Negro, averaged much below the mean test score levels of regularly admitted freshmen, and carried courseloads half comprised of special courses developed by several departments. Descriptors - Motivation, Parents, Performance Factors, Underachievers

A simple inexpensive technique was designed to raise achievement in those children whose primary problem was low motivation. The technique involved daily dispensing of ditto'd notes to the child at school regarding his performance in the area of interest. These notes were taken home and parents arranged reinforcing consequences there. This technique can be initiated by counselors, psychologists, social workers and principals as well as teachers and parents. (Author)

Descriptors - Community Colleges, Counselor Attitudes, Counselor Functions, Educational Objectives, Junior College Students

Results showed that counselors were more concerned with promoting coordination among faculty, students, and administration and with conducting surveys for strengthening student services. Students felt that a greater emphasis was needed on recommendations on scholastic programs and on consultation concerning career plans, educational goals, and probable chances for achieving them. Described is a program intended to perform some of the functions performed by a counselor. It is merely a tool to be used by counselor, not a replacement for him. The program described applies to vocational counseling. The main object of such a program is to promote the decision making ability of the student by making information available to him, and by giving him the opportunity for vicarious experiences in making occupational choices. Descriptors - Age, Child Development, Negroes, Self Concept, Socioeconomic Status

The construct of egocentrism within Piaget's theory of intellectual development was evaluated as to its convergent, discriminant, and predictive validity within the concrete-operational stage. It was hypothesized that there is a high correlation among three types of egocentrism tasks: space, communication, and role-taking (convergent validity), and a similar relation exists between each task and "decentering" ability. None of the major hypotheses were fully supported in preliminary analyses. With one exception, egocentrism is significantly but only moderately related to chronological age and mental age. (Author)

The investigator hoped to avoid weaknesses inherent in the customary paper and pencil tests with their limitations on pupils of low verbal skills and the possibilities that some pupils may fake on psychological tests and inventories. This research used compositions produced in normal classroom situations and utilized trained assistants to record and classify those values expressed. The values recorded on the Rubric for Expressed Values (REV) showed substantial correlation with values assessed on the Differential Values Inventory (DVI) developed by Prince in 1957; yet indications were present that the two instruments did indeed assess values structure somewhat differently. Descriptors - Cultural Factors, Drug Abuse, Social Change, Student Behavior, Student College Relationship

Today there are several problems associated with drug usage: (1) ignorance; (2) semantics, (3) communication; and (4) change as a constant in the world. Some cultural contexual factors include: (1) the generation gap; (2) the educational level of students; (3) the effect of mass communication media; and (4) the awareness of poverty and injustice. Institutions can respond by: (1) creating a climate of openness and trust; (2) making sure information is available, (3) providing source credibility; (4) assisting in the dessemination of alternatives; and (5) attacking the basic problem. Descriptors - Group Counseling, Individual Differences, Individual Needs, Personality, Simulation

One of the objectives of the study was to determine if there was any relationship between two predictor variables, personality type (extraversion-intraversion) and perceptual orientation (field independence--field dependence); and treatment effects as shown by four criterion variables: (1) a knowledge test; (2) a simulation test; (3) frequency; and (4) variety of career exploratory behaviors. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Interaction Process Analysis, Racial Differences, Student Behavior, Teacher Role

The findings, although incomplete due to poor student attendance, show that black students are lower achievers than white students and are two and a half years behind grade placement while white students are one half year ahead on grade placement. White teachers and pupils function at higher cognitive levels than black pupils and teachers. In general, classroom climate, peer concepts, reading achievement and thought level used are related when comparisons are made between black and white students. (Author/MC)

If counselors are to become a part of the linkage system between school and work, they will have to change their posture from "neutral" sources of occupational and job information to active developers of information and to participants in the job seeking process. In order to bring about fairer hiring practices, counselors must act as "Change agents" and recommend to employers whose hiring standards are not valid that they should be modified. Descriptors - Educational Objectives, Learning Theories, Models, School Community Relationship, Student School Relationship

Students can learn faster if the educational forces are applied systematically. To achieve this goal, learning objectives for students should be primary and must be communicated in the classroom. It is important that the learning objectives be related to the concerns of the consumers of the educational product. For the educational system to work well, the student and prospective consumer of the educational product should agree on the learning objectives. This model will generate useful data for each decision making level in the educational system. (LN)

Descriptors - Community Involvement, Educational Needs, Educational Planning, School Community Relationship

This document contains the findings of research designed to involve a cross-section of Fresno, California, citizens in educational planning and to identify educational needs perceived by the "grassroots" of that community. The findings specified by frequency of response in the following major categories: (1) educational activities requiring more or less emphasis; (2) major educational problems; (3) locus of responsibility for teaching moral and ethical values; (4) education for job or career skills; (5) student guidance-counseling programs; and (6) minority group and adult education. Descriptors - Educational Needs, Educational Planning, Secondary School Students, Student Needs, Student Opinion

Small-group discussion sessions, comprised of students from the area's secondary schools, identified specific educational needs listed in the following categories: (1) curriculum; (2) job and career training; (3) minority group education; (4) school responsibilities; (5) development of ethical values; (6) extracurricular activities, (7) counseling and guidance; and (8) general improvements. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Educational Needs, Educational Planning, Urban Education

The purpose of this study was to develop an achievement analysis model and to analyze achievement of students in the Fresno City Schools with reference to potential causal factors influencing achievement. Pertinent sociocultural-economic factors and staffing resource program components were compared with the achievement data to determine probable causal factors. (Author)

Descriptors - Educational Needs, Learning, Learning Theories, Staff Role, Student Teacher Relationship

The learner must develop a self-concept by which he feels he can learn. From this self concept the learner must experience alternatives, that is, become actively involved in selecting what he wants to learn and how and when he wants to learn it. It is felt that, in Fresno, the teaching staff is biased toward keeping the student passive in the educational process. The above theoretical base should be used to change teachers' attitudes toward students. It is suggested that a staff development program be instituted to provide detail on this learning theory and to promote desirable changes in the educational program. (LN)

Descriptors - Educational Needs, Educational Planning, Guidance Objectives, Guidance Services

A model of a guidance program that would integrate guidance efforts in the development of a long-range master plan of education for an urban school system is constructed and used as a standard of comparison for the present model in use at the Fresno City Unified School District. It is essential that the prevention of problems be stressed, and if problems do arise, that they be diagnosed and treated at the earliest possible time. At all levels a reordering of emphasis toward the preventive model is highly recommended. (LN)

Descriptors - Cocurricular Activities, Educational Planning, Pupil Personnel Services, Student Needs, Urban Education

The purpose was to determine if the students in the district have the opportunity to be involved in a developmental, comprehensive, cocurricular program. All school levels were investigated to determine if students had motivational opportunities for self-direction and development with guidance and assistance. The major conclusion is that schools at all levels are involved in the cocurricular activities program, meeting most of the various needs of the district's student population. (Author/DE)

Descriptors - Educational Needs, Secondary Schools, Teacher Role, Vocational Education

A matrix of educational needs was established by the study and the following major findings were reported: (1) a lack of articulation between departments and between school levels exists in the school systems; (2) the total educational program lacks flexibility for innovation by teachers; (3) more attention must be given to the problems caused by de facto segregation in the school system; and (4) vocational counseling must be upgraded through better preparation of counselors. Descriptors - Activism, Governance, Student Alienation, Student Attitudes, Student Behavior

The findings showed that student unrest has manifested itself on the majority of campuses during the past five years, but less than five percent of faculty and students participated in activities related to unrest. Student unrest tended to be expressed through legal and generally accepted protest activities. Expectations are that student unrest will continue, that the amount and scope of demands as well as resistance to them will increase, but that many of the present demands will be met. (AF)

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Academic Performance, Higher Education, Performance Factors

The results show that the persistent probationer tends to be on probation longer than (2.2 quarters) after readmission (1.9 quarters). He tends to be an upperclassman, to earn a cummulative GPA higher than the mean for the sample, and he tends to graduate. Results imply that the persistent probationer has a tendency to be a successful readmitted student. (Author/AF)

Descriptors - Counselor Functions, Dormitories, Higher Education, Resident Assistants, Role Theory

Four roles were defined: administrator, adviser, counselor, and disciplinarian. Fifteen items were generated for each role, resulting in a 60-item instrument, which was distributed to students residing in two dormitories at Colorado State University. The students were asked to agree or disagree with each statement on a five point scale. The results support the hypothesis that four independent roles of the student assistant can be identified. Descriptors - Females, Fraternities, Persistence, Psychological Characteristics, Student Characteristics

Because college attrition is higher for independent women than it is for sorority women, regardless of aptitude and academic standing, this study was initiated to examine psychological and social differences between the two groups. Characteristics under investigation include interpersonal values, open-mindedness, academic aptitude, academic achievement, career-marriage plans, participation in extra-curricular activities, and socio-economic status of parents. High school data regarding size of graduating class, grade point average, and extra-curricular activities are also considered. (Author/NF)

A well-planned token system puts little financial strain on a school, and the transition from tokens to social reinforcers can take place within three to four months without loss of appropriate behavior. A token reinforcement program can improve classroom behaviors, but can only enhance academic behavior when academic materials are adequately presented. Bolstering the students' confidence, involving the parents, and providing reinforcement for teachers and administrators are also important elements in the success of a token program. (MH)

Descriptors - Elementary School Students, Motivation, Performance Factors, Testing

Two predictions are examined: (1) competitive treatments increase classroom performance and interest on a power test; and (2) game-like competition is as effective as reward competition in increasing classroom performance and interest on a power test. The competitive treatments had no significant effect on performance but significantly increased the childrens' interest in the test. There was no difference between the two significant treatments. The speculation is made that competition increases performance more in a speed task than in a power task; and competition increases interest more in a power task than in a speed task. (Author/RSM)

It was found that both freshmen and transfer students had unrealistic expectations of the college environment and anticipated a high intellectual or non-intellectual climate. The effect of the unrealistic expectations of transfer students on academic performance and satisfaction was somewhat unexpected and not altogether clear. Assimilation of the new students was accomplished early in the first semester and their perceptions became more realistic after approximately three months of classes. (Author/RSM)

Descriptors - Behavior Rating Scales, Conferences, Individual Development, Motivation, Self Evaluation

General objectives deal with motivation for learning subject matter knowledge and skills, developing independence, assuming increasing self direction, and conceptualizing a value system. Students were assigned to conference groups, which were non-directive in nature, each child setting his own goal and his progress toward it. Results showed that children really improved in their behavior. Only the individualized conference group showed a significantly higher gain than did the no conference control group. (SJ)

The objectives of this study were: (1) to determine the characteristics of bilingual (Mexican) and monolingual high school graduates and dropouts; and (2) to evaluate the curriculum and guidance in a 4-year school in San Jose, California. The sample for the study consisted of members of the graduating classes and of all dropouts for the school years ending in 1953 and 1955. It was noted that: (1) dropouts had lower intelligence quotients, higher marriage rates, and more children per marriage than graduates; and (2) that bilingual dropouts had lower employerment rates and less desirable jobs than monolingual dropouts. This investigation attempted to evaluate the effectiveness of the simulation game, Ghetto, in changing attitudes, and to determine whether effectiveness is associated with the personal characteristics of the players. The greatest significant finding was that student attitudes were more favorable after the game than before. However, no increase in factual information and a small decline in interest were measured. An analysis of responses suggests that the effective teacher, in contrast to the ineffective teacher, accepts the physical deprivation of the disadvantaged, recognizes racial and social discrimination, does not stereotype disadvantaged children, finds teaching the disadvantaged pleasant, accepts the liabilities of disadvantagement non-punitively, and accepts the existence of minority subcultures. Descriptors - Culturally Disadvantaged, Disadvantaged Youth, Effective Teaching, Elementary School Teachers, Teacher Attitudes

An analysis of a 186 item questionnaire showed that the effective teachers displayed empathy and commitment to teach disadvantaged children, were generally more experienced in teaching this kind of student and felt that their students have been wronged by society. A community-based program for youths in trouble, Achievement Place is a home-style training setting for pre-delinquents established on a token economy in which the boys earn various privileges by engaging in desirable behaviors that are seen as necessary for their eventual rehabilitation. The boys were required to take a "report card" for the teacher to mark. The teacher simply marked "yes" or "no" whether a boy had "studied the whole period" and "obeyed the class rules." All "yeses" earned privileges in the home that day but a "no" lost all privileges. The technique appears to be very effective as well as practical. (Author)

Descriptors - Behavior Change, Classroom Environment, Reinforcement, Student Behavior, Student Teacher Relationship

After baseline rates were obtained, extinction of inappropriate disputing or talking out behaviors and reinforcement of appropriate behavior with teacher attention, praise, and in some cases a desired classroom activity or a surprise at the end of the week brought a decrease in undesired verbalizations. The experiments demonstrated that teachers in a variety of classroom settings could obtain reliable observational records and carry out experimental manipulations successfully using resources available in most schools. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Grade Point Average, High School Students, Intelligence, Prediction, Socioeconomic Status

High school teachers and counselors, especially those concerned with the lower grade levels, should take into consideration a student's socioeconomic background along with his intellective factors whenever his academic performance is predicted. In lower grades where intelligence tests cannot be given effectively, socioeconomic status (SES) index with IQ score will be a better predictor of academic performance than prediction with IQ score alone. Results indicate that both SES and IQ contributed significantly to the prediction of GPA, but the contribution of IQ is greater than that of the former. (JM)

Black and white males and females are compared on post-high school plans, occupational preference level, diversity of their occupational preferences, confidence in occupation hope, reported determinants of post-high school plans, and vocationally related concerns, interests and values. Black seniors, especially female, tended to choose high level occupational titles more than white seniors did. Among the total occupational preferences, black males showed the highest degree of diversification. "Material Value," "Academic Value," and "Altruistic Value" were three determinants important to all. Differences between groups on the "Life Goals" were most often a function of sex rather than race. Descriptors - Information Systems, Records (Forms), Systems Approach, Vocational Education

An information storage and retrieval system has been developed for reporting job placement and followup data of persons trained in industrial education programs in California public schools. The system is built around five forms: (1) school registration; (2) verification of enrollment; (3) verification of address; (4) in-class follow-through; and (5) out-of-class followup.

Eventually the system calls for all data to enter a central, state-wide electronic data processing center; however, the emphasis in this report is on the data collection system, not the storage and retrieval system. (CH)

(365) ED 039 349 FROM SCHOOL TO WORK; A PILOT STUDY. Albany: Bureau of Guidance, New York State Education Department, 1969. MF-$0.65 HC-$3.29 25P.

Descriptors - Employment, Vocational Adjustment, Vocational Development, Youth Employment

The problems which youth face in the transition from school to work have been conceptualized into a model which relates specific problems to dimensions of self and environment in three developmental stages: (1) pretransitional--the life period before an individual is activated to seeking his first full-time job; (2) transitional--marked by activated to seek first full-time employment, occuring during grade 12 for about one-half of high school students; and (3) post-transitional-the first job. The strongest transitional needs were identified in areas of preparatory education and training, occupational information, self-actualization, worker role, job placement, mobility, and occupational mobility. There was no attempt to investigate causative factors; however, some causal inference are drawn. (CH)

Zeeb Rd., Ann Arbor, Michigan, 48106, MF-$3.00 Xerography-$5.60 106P.

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Achievement Tests, Decision Making, Grade Point Average, Junior College Students, Motivation

The study was based on the assumption that academic achievement can be measured, estimated and predicted with accuracy. Six predictor variables (the SAT-verbal, SAT-maths, English Coop., Math Pretest, HSGPA, and HSR) were used. Of the high school records HSPA was the better predictor of all three. SAT was a better predictor of CGPA and EGPA, and Math Pretest was the better predictor of MGPA. (PT)

Descriptors - Community Colleges, Disadvantaged Youth, Junior College Students, Student Personnel Services

These six papers concern general educational problems and problems specific to two year colleges. Marc Berger states that Education, as traditionally viewed, is mythology. William Birenbaum questions a wide spectrum of personnel-student relationship problem areas. Deans of students, he concludes, are obsolete. Arnold Buckheimer emphasizes the need for dialogue and confrontation if college personnel are to be what he thinks they must be. Dorothy Knoell defines disadvantagement and specifies program and curriculum developments aimed at reaching this group. Carolyn Sherif discusses her 10 year study of the behavior, attitudes, and goals of disadvantaged youths. Louis Lieberman, in the final paper, discusses the problems of socialization of the two-year college student and the ramifications should these be overlooked. (TL)

Descriptors - Activism, Secondary School Students, Student Alienation, Student Participation, Student School Relationship

A great deal of student unrest can be attributed to a lack of communication. The following suggestions are offered: (1) principals and teachers need to develop a greater understanding of today's student; (2) counseling services should be expanded and improved; (3) student councils should be given more authority; and (4) the curriculum should be modified so that greater emphasis is placed on current problems and issues. (RSM)

Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Student Evaluation, Student Teacher Relationship, Teacher Role

The purpose of the study was to determine the relative importance of: (1) generalized ability; (2) prior specific learning; (3) self concept; (4) peer esteem; and (5) teacher esteem for pupils on the prediction of arithmetic achievement. Major conclusions are: (1) achievement is positively correlated with status within the classroom, but achievement could be treated as a separate construct independent of status; and (2) sociometric status variables did not improve accuracy of achievement prediction when IQ and achievement pretests were in the equation. Descriptors - Activism, Adolescents, Group Dynamics, Interaction Process Analysis, Youth Problems

This paper is designed to help youth's significant others harness dissident youth's energy into the reins of society's problems. Included is a comparison between healthy rebellion (arising out of love for something) and neurotic rebellion (having no purpose except to fight conformity or the establishment). Listed are several recommendations to channel the energy of dissident youth: (1) need for institutional change; (2) increased parental responsibility for their children; and (3) administrators who deal with real issues and genuine student involvement. Descriptors - College Programs, College Students, Dropouts, Placement, Student Characteristics

The study presents data relating programs to success, attrition, and transfer of the students who enroll in them. Results indicate that programs of study which are homogeneous in terms of the abilities, interests college grades of their students can be identified, that these programs differ on at least two readily interpretable dimensions and that grouping of curricula on these bases simultaneously groups them according to sex ratio. Descriptors - College Freshmen, Orientation, Student Opinion

Approximately half of the students found the summer orientation program to be helpful, and the most useful academic information acquired was about courses they needed to take. Regular advisors were found to be more helpful than summer advisors. The underlying theme was that advisors need more factual information about available courses and the requirements for various majors. (RSM)

Descriptors - Aspiration, College Freshmen, Parent Attitudes, Parents, Student Attitudes

It was hypothesized that entering freshmen students whose parents both had only a high school education differed from entering freshmen whose parents were both college graduates in their expectations for the universities' environment. Findings indicate (1) it may not be useful to categorize students only on the basis of parents' level of education; and (2) significant differences between sexes in their expectations were found. Descriptors - Conference Reports, Counselor Role, Simulation, Student Needs

To present a picture of what the counselor should be doing from the viewpoint of student needs, Dr. Walter Busby spoke on "Human Needs and the Schools." The second presentation examined the desirability and economics of using the professional talent of counselors in a professional manner. Mr. Harry Adley spoke on the "Management and Utilization of Professional Talent." The lists of projects under development involving computers, printed materials and multi-media materials are extensive and extremely exciting. However, the introduction of sub-systems may well divert attention from the critical problems in guidance departments for longer periods of time. It takes a system to help decide what questions to ask systematically, and until the strands of the guidance operations are woven together in the minds of practicing counselors computer operations can never be more than attachments to already existing resources found in guidance offices. Descriptors - Parent Attitudes, Parent School Relationship, Sex Education, Social Change

Comprehensive sex education programs will soon become a reality in our schools. It is imperative that a positive approach be taken toward the outrage and protests of many concerned parents. The following three procedures could be beneficial in calming the fears of parents: (1) programs on sex education for parents should be implemented; (2) there should be parental involvement in the establishment and content of the courses; and (3) means should be provided for wide dissemination of information about materials on sex education. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, Computers, Educational Research, Guidance Services, Testing Programs

This paper presents a discussion of the use of educational tests in guidance services as seen in the light of modern developments in statistical theory and computer technology, and of the increasing demands for such services. Following an introductory discussion of the need for guidance services some very recent work in Bayesian inference is reviewed and the implications of this work for educational research methodology are noted. Descriptors - Ability, College Freshmen, Intelligence, Test Construction

The purpose of this investigation was: (1) to determine whether the hypothesized properties of the Structure of Intellect Tests could be found to hold for college freshmen, and (2) to determine the relationship with two standardized marker tests. The statistical properties of the scale scores and the study reaction to tests themselves indicate these tests may be applicable to college freshmen. (Author)

Descriptors - College Faculty, Group Dynamics, Human Relations, Student College Relationship, Student Development

The central hypothesis states that behavioral development of college students is enhanced by informal contact with faculty beyond normal associations during regular classroom periods. The results of this study corroborate the findings of prior research that faculty members do not significantly influence student behavior development. One important exception was that contact with a professor under these experimental conditions may have produced in students a greater concern for others and a greater tendency toward personal trusting relationships. Descriptors - College Bound Students, College Choice, Student Characteristics

The hypothesis examined stated that no differences existed between commuter and resident students with respect to 17 variables. The study concluded that: (1) the socioeconomic status of the family is significantly related to the choice of being a commuter or resident student; (2) commuter and resident students do seem to have different manifest personality needs; and (3) socioeconomic status, autonomy, dominance, change and agression are the variables most helpful in predicting whether a student will become a resident or a commuter. After briefly reviewing the arguments against experimental research and their underlying beliefs, the author sets out: (1) to explore the implications of using the laboratory to conduct experimental counseling research; and (2) to describe a laboratory based counseling research program. A distinction was drawn between the implications of research for counseling and applications of research findings to counseling. The author concludes that laboratory research which evaluates relevant hypotheses and attends to boundary conditions, fills the gap between basic research and counseling practice. (TL)

The Mooney Problem Check List, 1950 revision, form C, was used with 1114 Purdue undergraduate, single full-time students. The data was analyzed to determine the significance of the following variables: (1) sex; (2) class level; (3) type of housing; and (4) academic performance. A five-part questionnaire, developed partly from the above data, was designed to measure student utilization and awareness of available sources of help and to determine why students did not use existing Purdue counseling services. This pilot study was designed to appraise the effectiveness of two methods for facilitating learning in the affective domain in an elementary school setting. The two methods evaluated were: (1) teacher reinforcement of verbalization of feelings; and (2) feelings classes. The feelings classes seemed to promote an open class atmosphere while the other method lent support to a teacher centered class. (TL)

Descriptors - Counseling Effectiveness, Counseling Programs, Counselor Functions, Guidance Personnel, Guidance Programs

This study explored students' use of high school counselors, and more specifically, the effect of a black counselor on the helper preference of students. One of the most critical concerns indicated by the results was the low image students have of counselors as relevant helpers in personal-social problem areas. Of the results discussed, it was strongly suggested that black counselors would be well accepted in all but the rural school. (TL)

The purpose of the study was to develop a sequence of growth curves of creative productivity resulting from the investigation of the interrelationships of the variables of creative productivity, college classification, academic potential, sex and perceived anxiety at the university level. Results tended to support the positions of other researchers and writers, that present university environments do not promote or inhibit creative growth. The study also suggested that anxiety and creative productivity are not necessarily related. (TL)

This research paper investigates whether or not students placed on academic probation react appropriately to Burton R. Clark's "cooling out" process--a process designed to encourage students to match their levels of aspiration with their abilities and interests--by changing to an alternate major. Results indicate a reluctance of students to accept more realistic goals. This is seen as a major cause of high attrition rates and failures to earn Associate of Arts and Vocational degrees in the junior colleges. (JO)

A Pre-testing orientation was incorporated into the Work Incentives Program, a pre-vocational program for disadvantaged youth. Through reduction of anxiety, development of test-taking skills, and improved motivation and attitudes toward testing, the trainee improved his test scores. (KG)

Descriptors - Academic Aspiration, Counseling Services, Disadvantaged Youth, Dropouts, Occupational Guidance

Questions on educational and occupation aspirations revealed that graduation from high school and acquisition of semi-professional and professional occupational status was not associated with regular attendance, and that students' occupational aspiration levels were not realistically adjusted to their plans for furthering their education. Students saw lack of needed courses as the greatest obstacle to finishing high school. Data suggests that counselors should spend more time discussing the relevance of school to careers. (KG)

Descriptors - Academic Performance, Anxiety, Disadvantaged Youth, Elementary School Students, Socioeconomic Status

This follow-up study aimed to determine whether a similar relationship between anxiety in the school situation and racial-socioeconomic status in upper elementary school children could be found in an expanded population. Results show that black inner city children do manifest a higher anxiety level than white children due to unmet physical and security needs in the inner city environment. Thus, a relationship can be established between social-emotional cognitive structures and racial-socioeconomic situations. (KG)

Four years of research on behaviors useful in educational diagnosis and prediction of future success revealed two test highly related to the achievement goals of the first grade; these are knowledge of vocabular and visuoperceptual memory. Screening is the program's first phase: the second is establishment of intervention strategies with regard to children diagnosed as highly susceptible to academic failure. The lowest children were initially treated individually by paraprofessionals trained to be instructional aides. Techniques with a lower cost per pupil were selected for learning enhancement at other levels. (JM)

An indirect approach may best mobolize many black fathers to provide much of the emotional and positive experiences necessary for the development of their children. A program should establish a "trust working relationship" with a few fathers, have them recruit other fathers, establish father-child activities related to other than everyday concerns, have child activities planned by their fathers, and have the fathers actively involve their wives in group activities. This investigation was an attempt to follow up previous research dealing with the impact of films of successful Negro professionals, who had come from impoverished beginnings, on the self-concept and level of aspiration of Negro youth. The results are held to support the hypothesis that the first change in terms of a more positive self-concept among Negroes may be a more negative attitude toward whites as they attempt to explode the myth of white superiority for themselves and redirect hostility previously turned inward toward self. Vocational education, beginning in the elementary grades, must make clear the connection between reading and employment, arithmetic and income, and writing and self-respect. Vocational education must place all young people who do not go on to a 4-year college program on a rung of the employment ladder, including those who learn slowly. Lastly, vocational education must respond to a situation in which high school continues to be the only transition to the world of work for 60 percent of our young people while the number of jobs which the unskilled can fill is rapidly declining, and the number of jobs requiring technical skills is increasing. In an effort to determine the effectiveness of group counseling with student nurses, 76 students enrolled in their first professional nursing course were randomly placed either in a counseling group or in a control group. As hypothesized, those students participating in the group counseling sessions received significantly higher grades in the practice part of the course than those who did not participate. No significant differences were found between the groups for theory grades or final grades.

The rationale for conducting programs for the adult women who are seeking an "educational course of action" is based on the discontinuities in life styles experienced by women which make it extremely difficult and frustrating for them to contribute their talents to society. Descriptors - Pupil Personnel Services, Rural Areas, School Community Relationship, School Psychologists

Although there is no difference between the training provided for school psychologists who practice in rural communities and those who render service in ruban areas, there are definite contrasts in the actual work. An elaboration of these comprises the bulk of this paper. (TL)

Descriptors - Behavior Patterns, Student Behavior, Study Habits, Testing, Testing Programs

Time spent in contact with academic course materials as a function of two testing schedules was measured using college undergraduates in an introductory Educational Psychology course. Results suggest that daily testing supports more consistent study patterns than do intermittent testing programs. (Author)

This report is focused on New Iberia, Louisiana, its school system, and a very brief background of the integration situation in the community. A brief background is given, including the counselor's evaluation of the situation, his yardstick action, and his goals. The reactions to change are discussed. Factors that should have been considered are then presented, followed by a call for unity and redirection. (KJ)

Descriptors - Aspiration, Disadvantaged Youth, Negro Youth, Sex Differences, Urban Youth

It was concluded from the findings that the metropolitan Negro youth studied did maintain a consistently high level frame of reference. Boys and girls maintained identical hierarchies of goal importance. Pertaining to sex differences, it was observed that boys tended to hold slightly higher educational and income goals to demonstrate a higher level of consistency across goal levels in their frame of reference. Following an orientation session in which test-anxious students were instructed in the theory and methods of desensitization, eighteen ISU undergraduates applied for a desensitization and counseling program for test-taking anxiety. It is concluded that group desensitization in this seven session model is an effective and efficient technique to modify anxiety responses to test taking situations. (Author)

Descriptors - Culturally Disadvantaged, Disadvantaged Youth, Educational Research, Information Processing, Learning Theories

This study concerns the relationship between social class and the rate of processing of visual information in young children. The study focused only on basic cognitive processes. The study concludes that: (1) young children of low social class can be tested using the tachistoscope; (2) the four stimuli used (circle, star, square, and triangle) were appropriate for testing young children; and (3) children from a low socio-economic background do exhibit slower processing rates. Descriptors - Adult Students, Career Choice, Career Planning, Females, Occupational Choice

This study focuses upon the childhood and adolescent career choices of college freshman women. Results showed that early vocational considerations of college freshmen tend to be few and general. The findings suggest that women do not make many or varied early choices, and that their later choices, although more varied, may be restricted to typical women's fields. (KJ)

Descriptors - Child Care, Educational Programs, Health Services, Nonprofessional Personnel, Supervision

This study investigated the extent to which trained non-professional personnel under nursing supervision can effectively

conduct health screening of Head Start children. Results suggest that with little training, aides can be useful in doing health screening under supervision by a nurse, and may thus serve to assist in areas where there is an acute shortage of medical and nursing personnel. (KJ)

Descriptors - Disadvantaged Youth, Economically Disadvantaged, Educational Programs, Urban Youth, Work Experience

Factor analysis was used to derive four relatively independent factors or general dimensions of the work experience of economically disadvantaged, urban youth: (1) supportive context of job; (2) state of job and field mobility; (3) job achievement; and (4) persistence. They appear to provide a basis for the selection of criteria with which to assess the effect of community work training programs for disadvantaged. (KJ)

Descriptors - Evaluation, Problem Solving, Teaching Methods, Training

A problem solving skill was investigated to provide direction for training strategies for a proposed personal problem solving training program. Conclusions were: (1) no one strategy proved optimal; (2) social reinforcement did have an effect upon some problem solving behaviors examined; (3) no training medium was found completely effective, (4) audiotape and written booklet procedures were not significantly different in their effect; (5) the oral lecture was no more effective than the baseline control treatment; and (6) the measures may have lacked necessary sensitivity to discriminate between problem solvers. Descriptors - Behavior Change, Behavior Problems, Counseling, Counseling Effectiveness, Discipline

This study evaluates the effectiveness of continued remedial problem counseling for those students in a large high school who were disciplined for serious breeches of school conduct and for those showing deteriorating behavior. The project students were found to accept personal responsibility for school problems. Following counseling the typical project student was likely to show better attitudes toward the school and discipline. Counseling was considered to be of more personal value by the student than the discipline. (KJ)

A community helper project involved 37 untrained volunteers in a one-to-one relationship with children manifesting behavioral and learning problems in school. Experimentals met for 22 interviews over 18 weeks with a helper; 13 controls received remedial tutoring or counseling; 24 controls received no special services. Ratings of behavior, personality, academic achievement, and intelligence indicated no significant differences between the groups. It was suggested that the treatment period be extended and need frequencies analyzed. (Author/JD)

An effective program for individualizing instruction must be based on extensive additional psychological research and development in: (1) formulating the functions of an educational system; (2) achieving the individual's educational goals; (3) monitoring the individual's progress; (4) formulating goals and planning individual development; and (5) preparing the teacher for individualizing education. Institutions will have to change themselves radically if they are seriously interested in instituting open admissions policies. Under a really open admissions policy, the student should have the opportunity to have a series of experiences that he considers desirable for himself at that time, without requirements, grades or accreditation. When the student decides that he wants to prepare for a specific profession or degree, he can readily transfer to a credit program. Learning to take responsibility for one's own learning is the central aspect of individual growth and this will be fostered by a policy which allows students to help determine what is relevant to their education. The findings indicated that: (1) college quality indicators or college size and complexity have neither positive nor negative effect on the overall social status of the occupations selected by students, when individual background factors and freshman occupational choices are taken into account; (2) college quality indicators show no systematic effects on shifting student occupational choices; and (3) large schools tend to shift student occupational choice toward high-status professional occupational choices and away from high-status academic occupations, while small schools have just the opposite effect. This is the third progress report on Orange Coast Junior College District's standardized data storage and retrieval system. Among the conclusions reached are: (1) the use of questionnaires or forms filled out by large number of students are not effective, and might be replaced by item-sampling techniques used in conjunction with in-depth interviews; and (2) potential user disagreement on uniform data formats, questionnaire items, and procedures restricts the effectiveness of proposed regional data centers. The project offers co-op students three plans: (1) alternate class attendance and a full-time job in conjunction with another student on a semester basis (alternate semester plan); (2) a part-time job in conjunction with appropriate college class loads (parallel plan); or (3) a full-time job in conjunction with reduced evening college class loads (extended-day/evening college plan). Advantages found by students include a new feeling of community involvement, a greater sense of relevance of the college experience to career goals, and a high degree of financial security permitting regular college attendance. The two benefits most often cited by employers are the opportunity to recruit young, college-trained employees, and the ability to get full-time coverage of work assignments. (JO)

Objectives of a student-counselor-assistant program included determining if the peer counselors could influence the academic success and motivation of socioeconomically disadvantaged students to complete the two-year program, and if they might ultimately help recruit youths into the program. Results after the first semester of the program showed: (1) counseled students persisted at a statistically significant higher rate than did non-counseled; (2) counseled students performed at a higher academic level than comparison students; and (3) 90 per cent of the counseled group rated the program as good or excellent, as did 100 per cent of the student counselors. Results after the second semester revealed that subsequent persistence and academic performance effects are not as apparent after the first semester. (JO)

Freshmen entering the two schools were surveyed during their orientation week and 18 months later. Findings indicate that entering freshmen had: (1) similar demographic characteristics; (2) much the same expectations for environmental press; (3) highly similar personality profiles; and (4) similar levels of dogmatism. Demographic characteristics of freshmen who subsequently dropped out did not differ significantly from those who continued; however, institutional environmental press did differ, with support of intellectual pursuits and adult treatment of students being greater in the junior college. There was no clear indication that either type of institution was more effective for a specific type of student. (JO)

This study explored the feasibility of group meetings of Head Start mothers that focused on understanding of one's self and others. Foci of the discussions included: (1) parent-child relationships; (2) methods of discipline; (3) communication skills; (4) self-knowledge; (5) marital status; (6) heterosexual relationships; (7) drug, alcohol, and glue sniffing addiction; and (8) racial feelings. The sustained level of participation and the favorable reactions to the program reported by the parents and staff indicated that a parent awareness program is feasible for this population. It was found that the majority of male seniors, both black and white, planned to enter professional, semiskilled, or skilled occupations, while four out of ten of the females, both black and white, planned for a professional occupation. Seven out of 10 of all males planned to continue their education, while more black females than white planned on additional education after high school. All male respondents' plans for residence were similar, while more black females than white females planned on urban living. Black males wanted to marry younger. The white female expected to marry younger than the black female and desired five or more children as opposed to only two children expected by the black female. (JS)

The hypotheses were: (1) that Negro youth are more positively oriented toward participation in military service than white youth; and (2) that lower class youth with high aspirations are more positively oriented toward military service than other youth. Findings showed that no difference existed between the Negro and white respondents in the proportion desiring military service and that level of aspiration did not seem to influence military orientations of youth. As a part of the final Report of the National Study of American Indian Education, this study points out that there are no reasons to suppose that Indian children are basically or genetically less or more intelligent than other children. The low achievement of the Indian children at certain grade levels is related to the child's limited experiences and is compounded by the family's socioeconomic circumstances. Conclusions point out that the pattern of low achievement of the Indian children is similar to that of other low-income and non-English-speaking children. (EL)

This paper discusses the current and severe problems of rural America, noting that, although declining, the American rural population is one of the world's largest rural populations. A comparison is made between rural America's attempt to provide vocational and technical education through adherence to a system of comprehensive schools and the attempt by cities to satisfy vocational education needs by way of specialization. Conclusions suggest the need for state and locally supported Federal action to achieve equality of educational opportunity. (AN)

Descriptors - Cognitive Development, Curriculum, Federal Programs, Individual Differences, Rural Areas, Student Teacher Relationship

"A Preschool Training Program" is Volume 6 in a series of seven guides prepared by the Southeastern Education Laboratory to assist rural school districts in writing acceptable Title III proposals under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. The program described in the document seeks: (1) to implement a three-year sequential curriculum based upon concepts and structure basic to the cognitive development of young children; (2) to change the traditional roles and functions of the student and teacher; (3) to accommodate individual differences in learning; (4) to involve parents in cognitive development of their children; and (5) to allow teachers to work with small groups by using paraprofessionals. Descriptors - Academic Achievement, American Indians, Disadvantaged Youth, Research Reviews (Publications)

The main body of this research synthesis serves to point out research findings regarding the educationally disadvantaged Indian American school children. Some of the factors reported to be the underlying causes for the educational retardation of the Indian children include: (1) the Federal Government's policy of coercive assimilation which has resulted in disorganization of the Indian communities; (2) a lack of self-fulfillment of Indian students at every age level; (3) the negative self-images of the Indian students; and (4) a lack of understanding of cultural differences on the part of many schools. The study cites efforts of some schools to combat this problem through implementation of programs that are bicultural and bilingual in nature. (EL)

Descriptors - Achievement, Elementary School Teachers, Teacher Attitudes, Test Interpretation

The manner in which IQ test results were communicated to teachers appeared to have no significant influence on their estimates of students' scores. However, it did appear to influence their estimates of the students' overall achievement relative to one another. The results indicate that the procedure of changing teacher expectancy must be thoroughly investigated. (Author/GS)

Descriptors - Disadvantaged Youth, Employment, Job Applicants, Testing, Vocational Counseling

United States Department of Labor manpower experimental and demonstration manpower projects have found several approaches of use in the pretesting preparation of out of school and out of work youth and adults: (1) special coaching on use and value of tests; (2) pretesting in nonthreatening atmospheres; (3) test tutoring and practice; (4) training in test-taking skills; (5) remedial instruction; and (6) advance exposure to the test site. The appropriate methods will vary depending on the character of the vocational tests and the education and experience of the job applicants. (Author/JM)

Descriptors - Attitudes, Elementary School Students, Racial Differences, Self Concept, Sex Differences

The study involved two stages: (1) the evaluation of various stimuli as positive or negative; and (2) the determination of whether or not positive stimuli were associated with the color white, and negative stimuli with black. The stimuli were statements related to self perception broadcasted so that the sound originated with equal intensity from each of two recorder speakers, one painted white and the other black. The basic prediction (that children would "hear" the positive self statements coming from the white box and the negative self statements coming from the black box) was supported by the data, the data for white subjects more clearly supportive than that for black subjects, and more for males than females. Descriptors - Attitudes, Behavior Problems, Disadvantaged Youth, High School Students, Student Characteristics

A major object of this study was to learn more about factors relevant to the educational adjustment of NYC enrollees. All the enrollees who attended counseling sessions during a three week period were studied. Nearly all the enrollees were found to aspire to complete high school, although less than half aspire to go to college. Males had more behavioral problems than females. (JM)

The data analysis model employed treated the attributes of the school a student attended as if they were his own attributes. There is a pronounced tendency for students of similar social background to go to school together. This tendency is also pronounced for "Achievement," but not for "Motivation." In explaining the behavior of students and schools, the same relative roles are played by the social background and family process sets of variables for expectations, attitude toward life, and study habits but not for educational plans and achievement. Preliminary analysis provided some evidence that in this population conformity is negatively related to intelligence. Additionally, the ethnic group by source of pressure interaction was the only significant source of variance. Whites conformed more to white peers than to black peers, and the whites conformed more to whites than did Negroes to Negroes. (JM)

Descriptors - Communication (Thought Transfer), Parent School Relationship, School Community Relationship

The study is an empirical attempt to discover the nature of the families in a particular black ghetto in Hartford, Connecticut, and ascertain the critical factor in the decision of these families whether to accept a particular educational opportunity for their children, which was provided by a summer bussing program. Critical variables were: (1) knowledge of the program; (2) a school as the source of such knowledge; (3) receipt of an application from the school; and (4) the involvement in other types of voluntary educational programs. Descriptors - Aspiration, Disadvantaged Youth, High School Students, Rural Youth, Suburban Youth

The purpose was to determine whether the vocational aspirations of disadvantaged and lower middle class inner city students were higher than those of their peers in the suburbs and rural areas, and whether presentation of occupational information in an informal small group setting would influence the vocational aspirations of all three groups. Data showed no difference among the vocational aspirations of inner city, suburban, and rural students; and that the presentation of occupational information will have no influence on the aspirations of the students. Descriptors - Attitude Tests, College Admission, Disadvantaged Youth, Secondary School Students, Student Attitudes

This is an evaluation of a summer tutorial program designed to encourage inner city secondary school students to complete high school in a manner such that their chances of entering college would be maximized. Analysis of the data revealed that: (1) in the last three years of school, there was essentially no difference in the scholastic achievement of the two groups tested; (2) at the end of the program (senior year in high school) the tutorial group's school related attitudes were significantly more positive than those of the control group; (3) for the tutorial group, positive attitudes toward school were not significantly related to intelligence; and (4) after high school, 82 per cent of the tutorial group and 18 per cent of the control group began college. Descriptors - Motivation, Problem Solving, Student Attitudes, Vocational Education

Sixty students were categorized into a stratified four-group design to ascertain the predictive value of achievement motivation as it relates to: (1) diagnostic problem solving ability; (2) diagnostic problem solving knowledge; and (3) student attitude toward the course. The group highest in strength of achievement was statistically superior on both the problem solving performance and the problem solving knowledge variables to the group lowest in strength of achievement. The group with high scholastic ability was also statistically superior on both variables to the group lowest in scholastic ability and the significant differences were found in attitude scores, either between groups or between the three levels of scholastic ability. Descriptors - Administrative Personnel, Attitudes, Counselors, High Schools

Some of the findings include: (1) an overall favorable attitude among principals and counselors toward industrial arts; (2) an agreement with the objectives, expected educational outcomes, and tenets of industrial arts; (3) a view of industrial arts as a part of a general education rather than vocational education; and (4) a positive relationship between the attitudinal scores of the respondents and their school enrollment, their undergraduate major, their supervision of industrial arts, and their exposure to and experience with industrial arts. Descriptors - Followup Studies, Program Effectiveness, Program Evaluation, Vocational Education

To identify and describe secondary vocational education programs that have been successful in increasing the total placement rate when compared with other courses of instruction. 445 programs were selected through a literature search, mail and telephone inquiries, personal contacts, and other means. The evaluation of each program was studied, particularly the followup of graduates. In addition, on site evaluations were made by project staff of evaluation problems in 30 programs. The project staff was unable to show that any of the programs met the study's criteria for success. (Author/SB)

Descriptors - Adolescents, Educational Change, Information Utilization, Social Change, Vocational Education

It is relatively easy to gather data but to disseminate and ensure utilization of that data in a way which will induce meaningful change is not so easy. A series of three dissemination activities were organized for school personnel using materials developed on the work orientation of teenagers. These activities provided insight into the problems encountered when endeavoring to promote change. The problems were: (1) psychological resistance; (2) sociological resistance; (3) ecological resistance; (4) economic resistance; and (5) political resistance. A suggested principle to follow in planning such activities is to identify sufficient similarities of the new context with contexts familiar to the participants. (JS)

Descriptors - Behavior Patterns, Group Dynamics, Intergroup Relations, Personality Assessment, Prediction, Testing

The purpose of this study was to compare the power of two personality tests, differing in their philosophy and approach to testing, to differentially predict behavior of individuals in a group. Significant intercorrelations were found to exist between what was measured by the Runner Studies of Attitude Patterns and the Sixteen Personality Factor Inventory. Both of these tests were capable of predicting perceived behavior in small group interaction. The Runner instrument was a more sensitive and powerful measure in this prediction than the 16 P.F. The present study was designed to see if acceptance as one of the characteristics of a successful counselor could be measured objectively. Five groups of subjects were used in this study. They were most effective counselor group, least effective counselor group, college level group, adult high school completion group, and adult less than high school completion group. The results showed that the most effective counselors were significantly more accepting than the college level group, the adult high school completion group, and the adult less than high school completion group. No significant difference was found between the most effective counselor and least effective counselor groups. However, a trend was noted toward the most effective counselor group being more accepting than the least effective counselor group. (Author)

It was hypothesized that college students with ratings of high, medium or low self-esteem would perform differently over four semesters of college work and would differ in academic goals. It was concluded that although the criterion measure of personality termed ascendancy appears to adequately differentiate students on the basis of level of academic aspiration, its failure to differentiate groupings on the basis of change in academic achievement may be a result of the ascendancy factor being too global a measure of self-esteem. In the selected personal adjustment area, there was no significant difference between the two school groups. The results do indicate however, that the null hypotheses related to the social adjustment and self-concept variables could be rejected. It was suggested that there was a greater degree of inadequacy among the educationally disadvantaged adolescents from the Continuation School as compared with those from the public high schools on the social adjustment and self-concept variables selected for the study. All three null hypotheses were rejected since children who had received counseling made a significant gain in social adjustment over children who had no counseling experience. Descriptors - Attitudes, Elementary School Students, Learning, Personality, Racial Factors

Positive and negative racial attitudes were induced in subjects. It was predicted that subjects would acquire negative social attitudes to a greater degree than positive racial attitudes and that females would acquire racial attitudes to a greater degree than males. A factorial analysis of variance showed no significant differences between males and females. No significant correlations were found between personality traits and negative attitude scores. A practical method for the study of acquisition of racial attitudes would seem to have been developed. (Author)

Descriptors - Colleges, Orientation, Universities, Research Methodology

The purpose of this study was to make a survey to determine if the four-year colleges and universities were initiating and administering a sound and comprehensive orientation program. Some of the major findings were: (1) all (100%) of the responding colleges and universities held some type of formal orientation program; (2) the hypothesis that no differences existed between private institutions and state institutions; and (3) the hypothesis that no true differences existed among colleges and universities with various enrollments with respect to the conduct and content of their freshman orientation programs. Principals, teachers, and pupil personnel specialists within and between types of school districts, differed significantly in their perceptions of the role and functions of counselors, directors of pupil personnel, and social workers. Principals, teachers, and pupil personnel specialists should perform those functions which are oriented toward the parent, teacher, and pupil in that order. (Author)

Descriptors - Attitudes, Changing Attitudes, Concept Formation, Educational Programs, Measurement Techniques, Racial Factors

An experimental educational race relations program featuring interracial group process was evaluated in terms of resulting changes of expressed interracial attitudes. No change in interracial concept meanings by either black or white participants was measured by the Semantic Differential Technique. It was thus concluded that the experimental program had no effect in changing interracial concepts in a positive direction. Correlation coefficients between concept meaning scores and Paired Hands Test scores were contrary to the predicted direction, indicating that the two measuring techniques measure different aspects of attitude. The Sixteen Personality Factor Questionnaire was administered to every subject to determine the degree to which they exhibited the personality traits isolated for investigation: (1) anxiety and (2) permeability (extroversion and introversion). High anxious subjects obtained significantly lower immediate achievement and delayed retention scores than low anxious subjects. However, there were no significant differences in either set of scores pertaining to permeability. Subjects who were listed as high anxious had a significantly less favorable opinion toward the individualized instructional mode than did low anxious subjects. The degree of permeability did not appreciably affect the subject's opinion. (Author)

Descriptors - Aspiration, Occupational Choice, Reading, Socioeconomic Status, Vocational Interests

Intercorrelations within the data supported the organizing principle: Upward occupational aspiration on the part of low socioeconomic status boys is directly associated with dissatisfaction with parents, particularly father. From an analysis of the variables associated with relationship to parents it was inferred that occupational aspiration is directly associated with: (1) a sense of competitiveness induced by a display of favoritism on the part of parents for some child in the family; (2) a degree of emotional separation from father; and (3) an awareness of unhappiness during childhood. Participation in the "in-school" NYC program had no significant affect on school attendance, attitudes toward school, future, self, others, "things in general," and citizenship grade-point averages; had a positive affect in causing a significant reduction in disciplinary referrals and suspensions from school, and had a negative affect on scholarship (grade-point average). This study was directed toward ascertaining what influence a college student's concept of the behavior of college students has on his academic achievement in college. Even though the correlations obtained in this study were not high, the study has shown that there is some relation between how a student behaves and his academic performance in college. It was suggested that these results have implications for counseling programs in college. (Author)

Twenty common second order factors were generated from demographic data, a semantic differential designed to predict problem students, and the Conceptual Systems Test for a known freshman discipline population and a randomly selected sample of non-discipline freshman students. The same data were collected on matriculating freshmen and predictions were made from the results as to their probability for discipline involvement. Volunteers from a random sample of predicted students were assigned to one of six groups representing two treatments (didactic-group centered). The effect of group treatment on the predicted students as measured on the dependent variables stated above was inconclusive. Treated subjects in both methods showed a significant growth in congruence (adjustment) when compared with an untreated control. However, another measure of adjustment derived from same Q sort did not indicate a difference between treated subjects and the untreated control. (Author)

Analysis of the data indicated no change in black participants' expressed social distance attitude. However, a significant change was found in white participants' scores in a positive direction as was predicted. This indicated that white participants significantly altered their expressed social distance attitude in a favorable direction toward blacks. A significant positive correlation was found between dogmatism and social distance for white participants only. (Author)

The equal-status role-specific hypothesis of attitude change in inter-group relations would predict that a favorable change in attitudes held by majority group members toward minority group persons would occur only toward minority persons in those specific roles in which the equal status contact occurred but would not generalize to other role situations. The results do not provide support for this hypothesis. (Author)

The major purpose of this study was to investigate the possible relationship of heterogeneous and homogeneous ability grouping to the proportion of psychological maladjustment existing within and among each type of grouping pattern at the intermediate level of the elementary school in regard to: (1) total pupil population; (2) sex difference; (3) grade level difference; and (4) classroom variability. It appears, from this study, that neither a heterogeneously nor a homogeneously ability-grouping approach results in any appreciable overall gain in regard to psychological maladjustment among pupils at the intermediate level of the elementary school. This study was undertaken to determine the predictive value of the Gilmore Sentence Completion Test concerning academic performance. The over-all findings suggest that the relationship between the Gilmore Sentence Completion Test as a predictor of academic achievement using the two different high school scoring keys is such that more extensive use of this instrument should be considered. The results suggest that the Gilmore Sentence Completion Test does increase significantly the prediction of academic achievement, and, at the ninth grade level, this prediction does come sufficiently early in the educational life of a student to be of real value. The purposes were to study: (1) the relationships of supervisory goal orientation, type of supervisee lead, and time to supervisory behavior; (2) behavioral differences among supervisors; and (3) the relationship of the supervisor variable in combination with supervisee lead and time to supervisor behavior. It was concluded that a multivariate approach to research in supervision is appropriate, the influencing behavior of the subjects is similar to the teacher-student model, and supervisors differ in influence pattern. The results of this research indicate support for the following contentions. It seems that self-disclosure is a function of the characteristics of the persons involved in an interaction. The personality of the counselor has a significant effect on the persons willingness of self-disclose and his actual self-disclosure. In most instances the belief system of the client is also a crucial factor in the counseling interaction. Also, behaviors, attitudes, and value patterns brought into a counseling relationship tend to combine together to effect self-disclosure. (Author)

This study investigates whether group counseling for vocational choice reduces the magnitude of the difference between vocational aspiration and expectation, and whether one group counseling session would have a greater effect than none, whether two group counseling sessions would have a greater effect than one or none, and whether three sessions would have a greater effect than two, one, or none. The results indicated that realism between vocational aspirations and expectations increased as the number of hours of group counseling increased. The direction of the significant linear trend was toward agreement between aspiration and expectations. (Author)

Descriptors - Adjustment (To Environment), Counseling Effectiveness, Group Counseling, Parent Child Relationship, Parent Counseling

The purpose of this study is to determine the measurable effects of group counseling on children with school adjustment problems when parents only, child only, or parent and child both were counseled. Child Centered Parent Group Counseling was used to treat the parents and Activity Group Therapy was used for the treatment of the child. The results indicate that including the parents' activity in the treatment of the child with school adjustment problems increases the effectiveness of treatment. These results would seem to indicate that counselors should find ways of working with parents who verbally express feeling responsible for helping the child, as a means of correcting and possibly preventing school adjustment problems. This study examines two groups of students, normal flow students and delayed entrants. The main hypotheses of the study were confirmed. The purpose of this study was to investigate the differences in self-concept between: (1) non-users of drugs; (2) drug abusers; (a) users of marijuana; (b) users of stimulants; (c) users of depressants; (d) users of psychedelics; and (3) former drug users. A modified Thematic Apperception Test and a questionnaire were administered to 60 subjects (10 in each category). Ten perceptual continua were constructed to quantify thematic Apperception Test protocols. These were: adequate to inadequate; acceptability to unacceptability of and by peers and adults; freedom to restraint of emotional expression; positive to negative approach to problems non-threatened to threatened; self- to other-directed; people to things orientation. The findings point out that, in general, former users seem to have a better self-concept than non-users and abusers as a class; there seems to be little difference in the self-concept of non-users and abusers as a class. The null hypothesis that there is no significant relationship between the verbal operant conditioning of verbalizations connoting anxiety and the level of "core anxiety," as measured operationally by means of the Children's Manifest Anxiety Scale was accepted ($p < .01$). The aim was to determine what factors were related to an adolescent reporting attitudes toward school and learning that were not the same as those reported by his peers. At all schools students reporting atypical attitudes: (1) had less well integrated and less flexible future plans; (2) valued different aspects of college or a job, usually less competitive aspects; (3) showed different degrees of initiative with regard to decision-making; (4) more frequently reported conflict with parents; (5) more frequently revealed negative self images; (6) were less satisfied with school; and (7) were more often considered by school personnel to have adjustment problems. This study investigated the effects upon freshman women of residency in an all-class hall as compared to residency in an all-freshman hall in terms of academic and personal development. According to the limited scope of this study, some changes significant at the .05 level apparently result from residency in an all-class hall. It is, however, noted that the study indicated little difference in terms of the basic college survival determiners (grade point average, attrition rate, and lack of disciplinary involvement) between freshman women living in a hall with older upperclass women and those residing in a homogeneous class situation. The analysis of the data supported the following conclusions: (1) the recruit disadvantaged students displayed perceptions of being on the periphery of the university community; (2) the patterns of participation in campus affairs exhibited by the recruits indicated a purpose for involvement which differed from the purposes of the remaining groups; (3) familial influences on the grades obtained by the recruits were operative to a greater degree than for the others; and (4) the assumption of responsibility and feeling of inclusion in the general student body were associated with higher grades. Descriptors - Ability, Creativity, Family (Sociological Unit), Interpersonal Relationship

The purpose of this study is to determine if selected perceived parent-child relations are differentially associated with an individual's capacity to demonstrate the intellectual processes of creativity. The Torrance Test of Creative Thinking Ability and the Parent-Child Relations Questionnaire (PCR) were the two criterion measures used in this study. It was concluded that the familiar environment of the low-creative student does not differ significantly from that of the high-creative student. (Author)

Descriptors - Adolescents, High School Students, Psychological Characteristics, Social Influences

A factor-analytic approach was made in an effort to provide a construct explication of the Social Interests Inventory (Grinder, 1967). The factor-analytic technique facilitated an understanding of how certain adolescents fit together the demands of certain aspects of the inter-personal and intra-personal domains. Adolescents who are differentially oriented to youth culture activities and to involvement in adult-sponsored activities were found to differ substantially on a variety of socio-personality measures. The internal structure of variables related to the Social Interests Inventory was found to be highly satisfactory. (Author)

Descriptors - Racial Factors, Social Attitudes, Social Psychology, Testing

Hypothesized inverse relationship between empathy (affective sensitivity) and prejudice was not supported. The relationship between the contact variable and prejudice was supported. Change orientation is significantly negatively correlated with prejudice. Religiosity and prejudice are not significantly negatively related to prejudice. (Author)

Descriptors - Emotional Development, Environmental Influences, High School Students, Males, Values

This study was designed to determine the relationships of perceived level of importance and degree of satisfaction with fulfillment of developmental needs to the following environmental factors: residence, socio-economic status, levels of parents' education, employment status of mother, style of parental decision making, parental dominance in decision making, levels of parental freedom in decision making and degree of parent child conflict. Among the conclusions are: (1) the introduction of visual and audio feedback of videotape does not result in a change of self-perception; and (2) the augmentation of group confrontation with videotape confrontation does not contribute significantly to a change of the real-ideal self-concept. The major intent of this study was to assess and compare the attitudes of student leaders and non-leaders, from three Colorado institutions of higher education, toward active involvement in the decision making process at the collegiate institution. The analysis presents evidence that the perceptions of actual participation in decision making were significantly different between authoritarian and non-authoritarian students. Leadership status did not produce any significant differences in perceptions of actual participation. Grade point average created no significant differences in perceptions of actual participation in the decision making process. The factors of sex and satisfaction with one's school produced significant differences in perceptions of actual participation at Colorado State College only. (Author)

Subjects consisted of 34 graduate students enrolled in the counselor education program at Northern Illinois University. During the early part of the spring semester the Expressed Philosophical Belief Instrument was administered. One week later the Ames Philosophical Belief Inventory was administered. The scores were used to identify the philosophical beliefs of counselor-candidates and each of the four measures of counseling effectiveness. The results seem to suggest that philosophical beliefs are not associated with counseling effectiveness. (Author)

Conclusions were made that the marathon group was an effective technique in the causation of changes on the two instruments used in the study. It was postulated that the marathon may cause some individuals or specific character traits of an individual to experience a deterioration effect. It was concluded that fatigue in counseling was not necessarily a negative aspect, but more research was needed to answer this question. (Author)

Descriptors - Negro Youth, Occupations, Perception, Prediction, Socioeconomic Status

The analysis of the data supported the conclusions: (1) the occupational hierarchy recognized by the subjects from the lowest economic stratum did not differ from the hierarchy recognized by the subjects from other economic strata; (2) the subjects did perceive a positive relationship between economic status in childhood and probable adult occupational status; and (3) the perception of the relationship did not differ with sex or economic status. Descriptors - Achievement, Racial Factors, Sex Differences, Socioeconomic Status, Teacher Behavior

Differences in achievement scores exist between the studied low SES boys and girls in reading, arithmetic, spelling, and language. Girls obtain higher scores than do boys. Differences in achievement scores exist in teacher assessment of low SES pupils marked satisfactory and in those marked unsatisfactory. Differences in IQ scores exist between low SES pupils receiving satisfactory teacher marks and those receiving unsatisfactory teacher marks. (Author)

Descriptors - Communication (Thought Transfer), Counselor Evaluation, Counselor Performance, Personality, Prediction

The purpose of this investigation was to research the potential effective predictors of counselor functioning in a live interview. The findings indicated that the "spontaneity" scale on the Personality Orientation Inventory (POI) was the best predictor of beginning counselor facilitation levels, though not statistically significant. The best multiple predictors of beginning counselor facilitation levels were the "synergy" and "spontaneity" scales on the POI and the Communication Index. (Author)

Descriptors - Ability, Achievement, Adult Students, Grade Point Average, Prediction

The purpose of the study was to identify factors that account for the common variance among 43 psychological and biographical measures on adult college students and to assess the relative importance of each factor for predicting academic achievement. The multiple regression analyses indicate that although the intellectual-education factor was the best predictor of overall grade average, noncognitive factors made substantial and sometimes larger contributions to the prediction of grades in specific course areas. There was evidence of marked differences in the predictive validity of some factors for males and females. (Author)

The dissertation represents an effort to develop a theory of occupational attainment applicable to rural youth and to test a segment of the theory which deals with factors related to the development and change of occupational preference of rural youth over time. Results indicated that socializing factors and socializing agents exert direct, significant influences on adolescent occupational preference. Only the socializing agent, parental preference for son's occupation, exerts the predicted effect on adolescent preference. (Author)

Forty-eight children in fifth and sixth grades were satisfied on the basis of their scores on the California Achievement Test and teacher evaluations and randomly assigned to a kindergartner who had been identified as being in need of special help. Results indicated that all kindergarten children who received tutoring showed significant achievement gains. Poor achievers were as effective in increasing performance of their tutees, showed a great deal of patience and perseverance with their kindergartners, and themselves benefited affectively from the tutoring experience. The results of this study on crisis intervention at the college level led to the conclusion that the crisis intervention method was effective both in reducing the number of dropouts and in improving the academic performance of the experimental group. It also seemed to have been effective in helping most of the students in the experimental group, including those that left early, to cope with a variety of academic and personal problems. Within the experimental group there was a statisttcally signtf-icant relationship between the number of interviews and the number of students . .th a GPA of 1.70 or higher. (Author)

The present study has designed a kind of case document about the problem of college underachievement. A short story form is used as a way of identifying the reader or adviser w.th a given college student's internal frame of reference at the time that the student was in academic difficulty. It is believed that in this way attempts may be made to understand some of the depths of the student's feelings and concerns which are related to his predicament. (Author)

On the basis of the data gathered and its statistical treatment, the investigator concluded that the child's perception of self and subsequent behavior and performance are closely related to community and family mores and general welfare. The findings led to the following conclusions: (1) the Mexican-American college graduate had a stronger sense of identity with people of his cultural heritage than the high school graduate; (2) the college graduate could generally rely on greater economic resources; (3) the college graduate received more parental encouragement toward educational goals; (4) the college graduate lived in areas where Mexican-Americans formed a relatively small proportion of the population: and (5) the college graduates felt high school teachers and counselors had been ineffective. The results of this study point to the importance of noncognitive factors in the learning process. Not only do the child rearing practices of the home effect the child's attitude toward learning, but it is suggested that the school also has its effects. There is a need to investigate how the organization of the curriculum, the structure of the school program and the relationship teachers have with children effect learning. (Author)

The following general conclusions were derived from the study: (1) a relatively more favorable attitude was expressed toward the alternative of school-given guidelines of appropriate sexual behavior than toward student self-determination of standards; and (2) relatively strong support existed for contraception education, though attitudes toward specific aspects of treating this area were more mixed. The problem was to determine the relationship between selected family variables and achievement level in lower socioeconomic Negro children residing in an urban depressed area and attending parochial schools. Openness among students and teachers was conceptualized as a characteristic of a person's belief-disbelief system. The rationale for the study followed the Frymier theory of rebellion which postulated four specifics in explaining rebellion. Some conclusions were: (1) perceptions of professional educators and students furnished reliable data for determining openness in high school; (2) open students were more nonconforming than closed students; and (3) there were other factors affecting nonconforming behavior besides openness. Descriptors - Achievement, Elementary Schools, High Schools, Racial Factors, Rural Areas, School Integration, Sex Differences

The major purpose of this study was to determine race and sex differences in the prediction of future grade-point averages from selected tests in a statewide public school testing program. There were no sex differences among white students in the accuracy of prediction of GPA from a composite of prior test scores and GPA. For black students, the accuracy of prediction in two comparisons was greater for females than for males. Twelfth-grade GPA obtained under segregated conditions was predicted more accurately than the same criterion obtained under desegregation. This finding was particularly noticeable in the case of black males. (Author)

The study examines adolescent deviance in 11 high schools in the East Bay of the San Francisco Bay area. Both anthropological and statistical methods are used. The findings demonstrate that the rebel does not secure optimum educational benefit from the school. The parental, subcultural, and status influences impinging upon the rebel work contrary to his effective learning within the comprehensive high school. The consequence is that he is not sufficiently educated through the schools for competitive participation in adult socioeconomic life. (Author)

Some conclusions were: (1) the desired minimum qualifications for the public junior college student personnel administrators are master's degrees; (2) the schools located in the metropolitan areas have a higher percentage of educational specialist's and doctor's degrees; (3) the size of the public junior college determines the completeness of the student personnel program; and (4) the public junior colleges located in the metropolitan areas have a higher percentage reporting complete student personnel programs. This descriptive study began with five assumptions and proceeded to answer four questions. Answers indicated that: (1) college counselors have the same goals as counselors in general; (2) the needs of students were seen as academic, vocational and psycho-social; (3) the primary responsibility for meeting the needs of students rests with faculty and administrators; and (4) college counselors should become vigorous and vocal critics of American higher education and the total society in which it functions. The major part of this study was to investigate the effects of goal structuring in a group counseling treatment designed to improve study behaviors and academic achievement for selected students placed on probation by their respective colleges. Eight groups of eight members, each randomly composed of students who were on academic probation in one of three colleges, met for nine weekly 45-minute sessions. Students who gained GPA were significantly more emotionally stable, more relaxed, more alertly poised, more self sufficient and resourceful, and more independent than students who lost GPA. Students who lost GPA were significantly more anxious and more outgoing than were students who gained GPA. (Author)

The five criterion variables were readiness scores (RSC) and achievement at the end of the first four grades (AS1, AS2, AS3, and AS4). The six predictors variables were sex (SEX), age (AGE), readiness scores, and achievement at the end of each of the first three grades. Results indicate that: (1) SEX did not contribute any significant prediction of the criterion variables; (2) AGE occasionally did show some significant contribution to the prediction of the criterion variables; and (3) RSC was the best available predictor for the prediction of AS1. A sociometic evaluation was conducted in the fourteen regular classrooms of Idylwild Elementary School, Gainesville, Florida. Acceptance of one's childhood peers in both social and academic situations was examined. Teachers were told that the members of the experimental group showed unusual promise and would emerge as "stars" or as leaders in the classroom during the ensuing few months. It was concluded that teacher expectancy, as developed in the experimental portion of this study, did not effect changes in the acceptance of the experimental group in either social or academic situations. Since all regular classroom teachers were white, while the student population was approximately 20 percent black, the possibility that differential effects, relative to race, were operating was tested. Upon examination of the data in this light, there were still no significant differences. (Author)

The purpose of the study was to estimate the relative effects that successful and high-level students, in the roles of group counseling leaders, may have upon the academic performance of low-achieving West Virginia University freshmen. The criteria developed to assess the effects of the counseling experience upon the experimental students in contrast to the control students were grouped into the three major areas: (a) academic performance; (b) personality factors; and (c) group members' reactions to counseling. The major conclusions from the investigation were: (1) the use of student leaders to conduct small counseling groups was effective in helping the low-achieving freshmen improve their academic performance; and (2) in relative student leader effectiveness, the graduate student counselor trainees were the most productive. The sophomore leaders were second and the senior/junior leaders were third. (Author)

The study sought to determine if participation in an adapted self-actualizing workshop would accomplish the following: (1) develop more self-actualizing values as measured by the Personal Orientation Inventory; (2) change values as measured by two value scales; and (3) enhance teenagers understanding of the process of actualization. The subjects valued the small group interaction more than the theory. (Author)

Descriptors - Classification, Learning, Preschool Children, Socioeconomic Status, Statistical Analysis

The High SES Kindergarteners demonstrated more ability to consistently categorize on attribute resemblance than the Low SES. The cognitive similarities were numerous with both groups showing very similar strategies, trends in the test score patterns, preference of attributes and types of errors. These results indicated a similar cognitive development in categorizing with the possibility of a slower pace in the Low SES sample. (Author)

Descriptors - Adolescents, Dropout Prevention, Dropouts, Personality

The rationale for relating anomia to the psychological variables--externality, self acceptance and acceptance of others--was couched primarily in terms of McClosky and Schaar's explanatory model of anomia. The correlation coefficients demonstrated positive relationships between anomia and externality, and negative relationships between anomia and self acceptance and acceptance of others. Analysis showed that respondents who were raised by father only up until age five experienced considerably more anomia than those raised by both parents, mother only, or neither. (Author)

Findings suggest that: (1) overall, the total group viewed the guidance concepts in a positive manner; (2) when the teachers were divided into three groups according to area of certification, they did not differ significantly in their perceptions of the guidance concepts; and (3) eighty-eight percent of the respondents indicated that they fused guidance with the teaching of English and social studies as compared to teaching guidance as a separate unit. Among the major purposes of this study were: (1) to determine the correlation between perceptions of family related concepts and school related concepts as evidenced by the Evaluation factor of the semantic differential; and (2) for subjects attending public schools, evaluative meanings attached to family related concepts tended to resemble the evaluative meanings attached to school related concepts by all groups, suggesting that the home may hold more reinforcing potential than the school for most children. The main problem of this study was to examine the effects of grading in the supervisory relationship of the counseling practicum. The findings offer no conclusive evidence that would discourage continuation of the traditional practice of having the supervisor assign students grades. The finding that was statistically significant was the differences in the supervisors' perception of their own functioning. (Author)

Of the 238 relationships between college preparation and performances of the graduates of large and small high schools studied, only 14 (6 percent) were found to be significant. Of these, 9 or 3.9 percent, indicated better preparation and performances of large school graduates and in 5 (2.1 percent), the small high school graduates excelled. It appears that the relatively few relationships found do not permit total rejection of the null hypothesis that there are no significant relationships between first semester college performance and size of high school attended. Some of the conclusions were that self-actualization was interrelated with the personal characteristics and attitudes of the college students. Interpersonal relationships, a sensitivity to cultural values, and an expressed satisfaction with college were important factors associated with their self-actualization. The study gives some validity to the concept of self-actualization as growth, and self-actualization as a construct that may be measured. (Author)

The purpose of this study was to evaluate the long- erm effectiveness of a Head Start program. Although the Head Start children had a significant positive change in intelligence during the three-year period, they were not significantly different in I.Q. from disadvantaged non-Head Start children in 1969. The conclusion was made that positive change in intelligence of the Head Start group could not be attributed to the Head Start program but to some influence in the schools during the three-year period. It supports the concept that intelligence can change in a stimulating academic environment. (Author)

Three questions examined were. (1) whether junior college students are less likely to prefer a clergyman than to prefer a non-clergyman as their college counselor; (2) whether junior college students are less likely to disclose themselves to a clergyman than to a non-clergyman; and (3) whether junior college students are less willing to desire counseling with a clergyman than with a non-clergyman. It was concluded that any stereotyping of clergymen by junior students loses its effects on the professional appeal of clergymen who become counselors after the clergymen have been hired. (Author)

Degree of perceptual congruence was determined by the discrepancy in scores between the child's self-perception on the Support Ratio Scale of the Personal Orientation Inventory, and father's and mother's perception of him as recorded on the same instrument. No relationship was found to exist between a college freshman's Grade Point Index and: (1) the degree of perceptual congruence between his self-perception and his parents' perception of him on a measure of self-actualization; and (2) the degree of disagreement between a mother's and a father's perception of their child (Author)

The problem of this study was to develop and test an attitude instrument for young school-age children. The large-scale testing showed significant differences at the .05 level of confidence between the means of the treated and control groups. The reliability estimates from retesting, two forms, and split-half were low. The treatment in the large-scale was designed to enhance self-concept; but an anticipated effect of the positive reinforcement treatment was an enhancement of attitude toward school. The Attitude IX results supported such a contention. (Author)

The 301 subjects were adolescent males from a low-socioeconomic background. For analysis they were divided into two groups on the basis of grade placement the first year of the larger study. The findings of the study showed there were significant changes in the extent to which adolescents participated in educational and recreational activities during a period of three consecutive academic years. There were significant changes in relation to the extent to which students participated in activities when race, I.Q., father's education, mother's education, father's occupation and mother's employment were controlled. When the relationship between participation in activities and occupational aspirations was examined, it was found to be significant for both groups. (Author)

The study concluded that, aside from one action, it could not be asserted that any specific litigation had resulted in rule changes at the University; however, the pattern of demands established by student litigation and rule changes at the University were in conformity. Descriptors - Career Choice, College Graduates, Curriculum, Vocational Development

Among the findings were: (1) teachers of vocational agriculture were listed by 31.8 percent as exerting the most influence in the respondents coming to Texas A & M University; 52.4 percent named them the most influential in their choice of majors; and (2) academic standards was the most influential factors in choosing the university. Descriptors - Attitudes, Counseling Effectiveness, Group Counseling, Intergroup Relations, Racial Differences, Racial Factors

The results of this study on the effect of race of the group leader on group counseling undertaken to improve intergroup attitudes among racially mixed fifth and sixth grade children showed that when counseling with racially mixed groups, a team of mixed counselors has no advantage over either a black or white counselor working alone. No significant findings were produced to show that group counseling was an effective means of alleviating racial attitudes. (KJ)

Descriptors - Cultural Differences, Disadvantaged Youth, Elementary School Students, Group Counseling, Self Concept

This study has been conducted to measure the effect of group counseling upon the self concept of culturally different students participating in an Elementary and Secondary Education Act, Title I, program. Results of the analysis indicate, subject to the limitations of the study, that the mean score on the self-concept scale of the sample in this investigation was 43.51 (pre test) and 45.53 (post test) from a possible 56.00 points. Group counseling altered favorably the self concept of the participants in the investigation on referents "Mother," "Peer," "Self as Subject," and "Self as Object," and "Total Referent" scores. Mean scores on referent "Teacher" were the most resistent to change. (Author)

Descriptors - Behavioral Counseling, Counseling Centers, Prediction, Universities

It was concluded that: (1) location of an individual along the repression-sensitization dimension is predictable from the responses to adjective and problem check lists, but not from four selected counseling process behaviors; (2) the counseling processes may need to be restructured to meet the perceptual defenses of applicants; and (3) it may be possible to assign students to a counselor with the utilization of the repression-sensitization dimension as a substitute for the intake interview. Descriptors - Counseling Services, Counselor Functions, Counselor Performance, Counselor Role, Perception

Analysis of the data suggested the following conclusions: (1) full-time counselors are more consistent in providing services to individual students; (2) part-time counselors perceive the promotion of the general school program as a greater responsibility than do full-time counselors; and (3) statistically significant differences were found between the degrees to which full-time and part-time counselors performed some of their functions. Descriptors - Attitudes, Behavior Patterns, Graduate Students, Sex Differences

Findings suggest that there exists a consistent relationship between sex of the subject and sexual standards and degree of sexual behavior. It was also noted that graduate males and females differed significantly in their sexual behavior and the standards they set for various levels of dating intimacy. An overall view indicates that sexual permissiveness is strongly associated with the degree of affection involved in a relationship. No systematic relationship was determined between religion of respondent and sexual attitudes and behaviors. (Author)

Descriptors - Attitudes, Disadvantaged Youth, Elementary School Students, Learning, Teachers

The major conclusions of the study were that: (1) most of the teachers had a firm conviction that disadvantaged children are educable up to a certain point; (2) frustration was a major attitude of the teachers toward the learning situation of the pupils; (3) the low attitude teachers were persons with defensive attitudes as represented by their criticism of the establishment; and (4) the positive correlation between the Minnesota Teacher Attitude Inventory and the Porter Teacher Attitude Inventory indicates its practicality in identifying better teachers for the disadvantaged. The purpose of this study was to determine: (1) those values held most significant by high school seniors; (2) what differences, central tendencies, and degree of consensus are associated with each value and role category. Every group of seniors ranked Social Contact the highest; Humanitarian, second; Power, third; Intellectual, fourth; Prestige, fifth; and Aesthetic, eight. Of the ninety-three role groups compared 84 ranked Social Contact the highest. (Author)

This study investigated the potential use of the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator, an instrument designed to measure personality type, as a research instrument in counselor education programs. Among the conclusions were: (1) the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator could be used as a predictive instrument in some aspects of counselor education; and (2) supervisor-counselor personality similarity on the sensation-intuition dimension of the MBTI could increase the probability of counselor effectiveness as measured by supervisor ratings. It was hypothesized that no significant difference would be found between black and white children in concept formation, but that middle-class children would have a significantly higher level of conceptual ability and that older children would perform significantly better than younger ones. It was concluded that differences in experiential background, due to socioeconomic level, to age, or to ethnic group membership, were the contributing factors in the variations in concept formation found in the study. Descriptors - Elementary Schools, Parent School Relationship, Socioeconomic Status, Urban Education

The purpose was to identify guidelines that might improve the chances of the low-income urban area elementary school principal increasing the number of parents who make in-school contacts. This purpose was accomplished by evaluating an experimental self-help parent education program. Among the findings were: (1) the Experimental Program failed to reach the "hard-to-reach" parents or to attract more parents than were attracted by the regular school activities; and (2) the parents who most often participated in school activities were social-class parents. (Author)

The purpose was to determine the Sorority Image also to ascertain specific differences between the Sorority Image and Sorority Profile; the Sorority Image and the Independent Profile; and the Sorority Profile and the Independent Profile. Fundamental conclusions were: (1) labels, characterizations, or criticisms leveled against sororities in the past are very much a part of the Sorority Image of 1969; (2) the Sorority Image almost matches completely the sorority reality, the Sorority Profile; and (3) independent women consider themselves to be very different from sorority women. Descriptors - Environmental Influences, Evaluation, Junior College Students, Junior Colleges, Student Personnel Services

The problem was to determine junior college students' perception of the student personnel services and to establish a profile of the environmental atmosphere on each campus. The study of student opinions toward personnel services resulted in the following conclusions: (1) student opinion reflected a need for adequate hospital facilities; (2) student disciplinary matters were significantly important to the respondents; and (3) three factors reflected student interest in participating in functions of student personnel services. Treatment conditions administered to students having primary patterns failed to yield significantly more primary patterns among the treatment groups than the control group. After two years, a large proportion of students with no primary patterns (52 of 84) demonstrated primary patterns. For both the primary and no primary groups, there was a tendency for the research subjects to become less similar to men employed in the physical sciences, police work, and in some of the business occupations. Descriptors - Ability, Counseling Effectiveness, Counselor Training, Graduate Students, Group Counseling, Preception

The findings suggest that group counseling for counselors for the sample population did improve the ability to be aware of the similarity of psychological meaning of the same unit expression between individuals. There is evidence that behavior cognition abilities are related to counselor effectiveness and therfore may exhibit promise as screening devices for graduate students. (Author)

The principal findings of the study were the following: (1) significant relationship between students' needs and their perceptions of the college emerged for the groups categorized as satisfied and dissatisfied; (2) satisfied students perceived the college environment as being friendly and cohesive; and (3) dissatisfied students manifest greater needs to be successful and recognized. A review of the literature was undertaken to determine to what extent the existential attitude is a factor in college student activism in the United States. This review covered the period from 1954 to 1968. Three areas were reviewed: (1) alienation; (2) attitudes and values; and (3) Existentialism and the existential attitude. The review of the literature demonstrates much evidence that Existentialism and the existential attitude are factors in the radical activism of certain college students in the United States. Descriptors - Counseling Effectiveness, Perception, Reinforcement, Response Mode, Verbal Commication

The primary purpose This study was to determine if counseling process confirming clients expectancies and/or consonant with client life style preference for verbal expression was related to subject response to reinforcement and perception of counseling outcomes. Results indicate that subject reponse to verbal reinforcement was increased where subjects' verbal expression preference was consonant with counselor verbal expression. Response to reinforcement may be increased by matching affective counselor and affective client language styles. (Author)

Descriptors - High School Students, Interests, Occupational Choice, Prediction, Vocational Education

This research sought to investigate the relationship between inventoried interests and self-ratings on interests, and to explore the use of self-ratings as a substitute for, or supplement to, inventoried interests as determinants of career choice of trade school boys. No measure of the interest dimension was of any practical education value in predicting the actual choices of groups of vocational high school boys. (Author)

The study was undertaken to provide a methodology for analysis and evaluation of college catalogs. None of the catalogs studied described an environment totally congruent with the environment described by the College Characteristics Index. The catalogs of smaller, unitary colleges tended to be more congruent with their measured environment than those of larger colleges or universities. The catalogs showing the least congruence with College Characteristics Index data tended to overrate the measured intellectual climate and underrate the measured non-intellectual climate. (Author)

The present study examined the Clark-Trow subculture typology in an effort to determine whether college students with a particular subculture preference sought and persistently interacted with students having the same subculture preference. The study hypothesis was not supported, as students chose friends who were of the same sex, who were in the same class, or who resided in the same residence much more than they chose friends who had the same subculture preference. Study data showed an extremely weak tendency for students with the same subculture preference to interact together with some persistence. (Author)

Descriptors - Intelligence, Interest Tests, Vocational Development, Vocational Interests

The purpose of this study was to investigate the rate and degree of vocational interest maturity of adolescent boys and girls between the ages of thirteen and seventeen, and to investigate the relationship between vocational interest maturity and intelligence. Differences between the measured interests of thirteen year old and seventeen year old boys and girls were significant enough to permit the construction of an interest maturity key. An inverse relationship between vocational interest maturity and intelligence was found in seventeen year old males, and a positive relationship between the two was found in thirteen year old females. Descriptors - Administrative Personnel, Counselor Characteristics, Counselor Role, Perception, Personality

The purpose of this study was to investigate the relationship between counselor role perception and the following factors: (1) experience, (2) training; (3) personality type; (4) administrator perception of counselor role; and (5) the counselor's perception of administrator expectations. It was concluded that: (1) both counselors and administrators perceive the actual and ideal roles of the counselor as substantially different; and (2) a significant positive correlation exists between what counselors see themselves doing in actuality and what they perceive that their administrators expect of them. Descriptors - Behavior Patterns, Counseling Effectiveness, Graduate Students, Interviews, Practicums

One of the purposes of this study is to determine the effect of the practicum experience on the trainees' ability to perform the individual counselor interview behaviors listed on the Counselor Interview Behavior Scale (CIBS) in contrast to changes for graduate students enrolled in didactic courses. The following conclusions are made from the results of this study: (1) within the limitations of the CIBS, evaluation of changes in effectiveness for counselor trainees was possible using the CIBS; and (2) the CIBS items which resulted in a significant F for the analysis of covariance generally indicated greater changes for the counselor trainees than for the graduate students. While the basic study confirms the general theoretical position that reference groups are significantly related to the actual performance of group members, it also produces some findings that indicate certain qualifications need to be added to our traditional understanding of reference group influence. For example, the research findings indicate that reference group influence plays a significant role in the academic Performance of female subjects with high academic ability but this relationship is not apparent for low ability subjects. In the activity group program two types of interracial contact--a field trip and a discussion experience--were experimentally manipulated so that the cumulative and separate effects of the two experiences could be evaluated. The following factors in interracial contact were found to have an influence on racial attitude change: (1) satisfaction with interracial contact; (2) the relative status of the participants' and (3) the social norm toward contact. The results of the study indicate that: (1) experienced counselors seem to have less difficulty in being regarded in a positive way by counselees regardless of their racial or sex membership; and (2) counselors who differ from their clients both in relationship to sex membership and race are less preferred than those who do not differ. A Career Decision Workshop (CDW) was conducted by the writer and two graduate student observer-assistants. Its major purpose was to assist students in learning and practicing a systematic approach to career decision making and to evaluate particular methods designed to aid the career decision-making process. The conclusion seems warranted that the Ss' improvement in career decision-making occurred because of participation in the CDW and that the tested methods were moderately successful in influencing this improvement. Among the findings are: (1) sensitivity received strong support indicating that students utilized this word most frequently when describing the ideal group leader; (2) sensitive is a description more frequently used by the student to describe his Actual Group Leader; and (3) minority students prefer an Ideal Counselor of their own race over the attribute of sensitive whereas, white students indicate no such preference. The basic conclusions from this study are as follows: (1) because of population mobility, the quality of education in any one area of the state or nation should be a concern of people in all parts of the state and nation; (2) teachers need to be furnished with complete information on new students soon after their arrival if they are to avoid stereotyping these students and if they are to provide for their education; (3) while moving may not be harmful for most students, for a substantial minority changing schools does have adverse and possibly permanent effects; and (4) school orientation programs need to be examined and their effectiveness evaluated if schools are to provide adequately for entering students. Characteristics used for the comparison included academic ability and achievement, parental characteristics, demographic data, employment and unemployment experiences, income and socio-economic status. Results indicated: (1) no single variables or combination of variables could be found to discriminate consistently between all groups on either test; (2) differences between Completers and Non-Completers in the same program (Center or Technical) were found not to be statistically significant; (3) technical students rated their post-high school education experiences more favorably than did Center students; and (4) lack of finances was a major reason given by Center students for leaving their post-high school programs. Students were randomly assigned to one of the following four groups: discussion, role playing, modeling with role playing, and control. The three treatment groups met one hour a week for four weeks. The groups which relied on peer supervision were provided with a set of instructions at the beginning of their meetings. The experimental groups were informed of the purpose of the meetings as they would be in most teaching situations . four groups did not differ significantly in the number of closed, biased, and multiple questions asked in a standard interview. There was, however, a significant difference in the number of questions which appeared not to follow from the respondent's statements. Analysis of the data indicates that the modeling with role playing group asked significantly more questions which were placed in the category of "appears not to follow" than the other three groups. Two personality questionnaires and two achievement tests were administered to 104 third and 114 sixth graders in an attempt to investigate those personality questionnaire-derived factors which best predict achievement at the elementary school level. Scores on Factor B (intelligence) received the highest weight on all questionnaires in predicting both criteria. In addition to intelligence, the following personality factors correlated significantly with school achievement: (1) Ego Strength (C+); (2) Surgency (F+); (3) Self-Sentiment (Q3+); and Confident Adequacy (O-); but these correlations were not consistent across tests and age groups. Descriptors - Adolescents, Health Education, Information Dissemination, Sex Education, Teacher Attitudes

Not only does a school health program need parent and community support, but also close cooperation with the local health department. Experience has shown that where many groups work together to solve a problem, the cooperative endeavor has a salubrious effect in helping to bring positive results. Such a climate can help influence a teacher who might have been reluctant to teach about VD. (Author)

Descriptors - Counselor Role, Counselor Training, Psychological Services, Role Theory, School Psychologists

The wide variety of functions contributes to the difficulty of defining a single role for the school psychologist. The professional history, varying goals and needs of school districts, differences in quality and emphasis of training, plus state and federal legislation have contributed to this. The result is that although many psychologists render meaningful services, some services may be of little value. (Author/KH)

Descriptors - Counseling Effectiveness, Identification (Psychological), Power Structure, Pupil Personnel Services

Describes part of an experimental program to upgrade educational standards in rural south central Indiana. The counselor's lack of identification with the school power structure assisted him greatly in communication with teachers and in establishing effective counseling conditions for students. His freedom from administrative responsibilities was indispensable. An adequate professional referent group or "model" is a valuable contribution to counselor efforts. (Author)

Consideration is given to technical information, the Basic Interest Scales, new occupational scale reference groups, scale development and validations, an illustrative scale, and other factors. Because SVIB's are more complex and involve uncertainties, they need to be approached with caution. (Author)

Descriptors - Adolescents, Disadvantaged Youth, Dropouts, Measurement Instruments, Youth

Presents the construction and application of a test battery tailored specifically in content, format, and administration to disadvantaged adolescent groups. The measures were administered to 256 male and female high school dropouts enrolled in a federally funded, youth-work training program. Results based upon item characteristics, levels of internal consistency, validity (against rating criteria), the interpretability of the factor patterns, and various research findings suggest that the measures--as well as the techniques utilized in their design--warrant further development and research application with disadvantaged adolescents. Descriptors - Adolescents, Cultural Factors, Parent Child Relationship, Power Structure, Sexuality

Adolescent use of sex as a vehicle for coping with authority is by no means always pathological. Adolescents are normally progressing into full heterosexuality. Some cultures force adolescents to break tabus and defy prohibitions in order to exhibit normal sexuality. They thus incur automatic definition as being bad by the defining authorities. It may, in fact, be the definitions that are sometimes inappropriate, and the adolescents who are sometimes normal. (Author)

Descriptors - Attitudes, Parent Child Relationship, Parent Counseling, Parent School Relationship, Sex Education

The keynote is to demonstrate that children's experiences living with their parents constitute their major sex education; schools broaden that education. Other factors are: helping parents recognize their own biases and the ways their behavior communicates sexual attitudes, aiding their acceptance of the inevitably different world their children will live in, and urging their personal knowledge of the school program. Descriptors - Attitudes, Group Dynamics, Interaction Process Anaylsis, Socioeconomic Status, Student Attitudes

Study results with Negro and Caucasian males of high and low socioeconomic status indicate that generally the respondents reflected a high level of success orientation, a moderate distribution of ambition reduction and a less pervasive level of the deviant orientation (acquiring desired ends by illicit means). Such observation appears to reflect normative orientations of American society. (Author/CJ)

Descriptors - Achievement, Dropout Prevention, Motivation, Student Alienation, Student Attitudes

This research was designed to develop and evaluate a program for "alienated" junior high school boys. Attempts to increase motivation, cooperation, and the desire to remain in school beyond the age of 16. After a full school year, positive changes were noted in self-reported personality measures and school achievement. Some regression was noted by the end of a year, especially in terms of community relations. (Author)

Descriptors - Counseling Goals, Counselor Role, Creativity, Developmental Guidance, Elementary School Counseling

For a creative counseling situation to occur, the counselor must cultivate a positive climate that can encourage the child's unique spontaneity, wonder, and feelings. The attitude and the climate that the counselor establishes in a counseling relationship are possible because the counselor himself has undergone his own search for meaning. Because of his fulfillment, he is capable of assisting other individuals in their process of becoming. (Author)

Descriptors - Anxiety, Counselor Performance, Elementary School Counseling, Student Teacher Relationship, Teacher Characteristics

Counseling with or without public commitment was not found to be a positive influence on school anxiety, teacher pupil relations, or sociometric status. Exploratory counselor responses were positively related to client improvement in teacher pupil relationships. Teachers working with the counselors had a more positive attitude toward counseling and guidance than those who did not work with the counselors. (Author)

Descriptors - Disadvantaged Youth, Intelligence Tests, Males, Social Influences, Vocational Development

This study investigates the efficacy of the Vocational Development Inventory in measuring the vocational maturity of inner city boys. Intelligence test results were converted to standardized T scores. Mean vocational maturity scores indicate large differences which disappear when intelligence is controlled by analysis of covariance. A variety of intellectual and social variable must be taken into account by those working with this group. (Author)

Challenges Ira L. Reiss' hypothesis that among persons whose general style of life is 'conservative' there is a negative relationship between social class and premarital sexual permissiveness; whereas for persons having a generally liberal style of life, this relationship would be positive. Two alternative rationales for theory are presented. Results did not confirm the theory. Followed by commentary by Ira L. Reiss. (Author)

Elementary School Guidance and Counseling, 1970, 4(4), 280-286.

Descriptors - Elementary School Counseling, Facilities

As counseling and guidance programs become recognized as a regular part of any elementary school program, new buildings with suitable counseling facilities will reflect the counselor's role and presence. In the meantime, many counselors must be housed in temporary facilities. One way of making room for a counselor is through reconstruction of an old mobile home, which in one case has proved to be more than adequate. (Author)

Descriptors - Adolescents, Personality, Psychological patterns, Sex Differences

Investigates three hypotheses derived from previous research, that different ordinal position groups manifest differential personal preference patterns, as measured by the Kuder Preference Record. Firstborns manifest greater preference for working with ideas, while later borns indicate preference for being active in groups. Presence of a male sibling is associated with greater interest in working with ideas and with more expressed preference for the avoidance of conflict. (Author)

This paper reports preliminary findings on patterns of primary relationships observed in a longitudinal study of student development at Kansas State University. It offers a definition of friendship, reviews some of the research bearing on that definition, and discusses implications for student development in data obtained in a related study at the University of Nebraska. A comparative analysis of friendship patterns is presented. (Author)

Several major conclusions are: (1) a fundamental relationship exists between the individual's personality needs and the college major he selects; (2) Personality need patterns are relatively similar among the students in different areas of study in the same school; (3) Differences among natural groups of both male and female subjects were in the expected directions. This study attempted to relate selected defined factors to success in a Manpower Development Training Center program. Subjects were disadvantaged or culturally deprived adults in a training course consisting of vocational and remedial education phases. Stated interest, previous steady employment, previous educational level, age at completion or aptitude test score were not related to success in the program. (Author/KH)

Descriptors - Achievement, Attendance Patterns, College Environment, Interests, Success Factors

It was hypothesized that success as measured by academic achievement, was positively related to congruence of the students' interests and personality traits with those of their instructors. Results indicated gross support for congruency hypothesis on the EPPS and the personality type code profiles on the VPI. (Author)

Descriptors - Behavior Change, Behavior Problems, Counseling Effectiveness, Empathy, Volunteers

Describes intervention program in which unpaid, untrained, and minimally supervised volunteers served in a one to one helping relationship with children manifesting behavioral problems. Although the program failed to have a substantial overall therapeutic impact, children displaying a high incidence of "inadequate immature" behavior showed marked improvement. The level of therapeutic conditions ("warmth and empathy") provided by volunteers was low. (Author)

(1314) Steinmann, Anne. FEMALE ROLE PERCEPTION AS A FACTOR IN COUNSELING. Journal of The National Association of Women Deans and Counselors, 1970,

Descriptors - Counselor Role, Females, Role Theory, Self Actualization, Social Attitudes

Use of the "Inventory of Feminine Values" with a group of college women indicated that they were prepared to sacrifice a career for a family. Apparently, attitudes held by fathers of young women influence their attitudes toward working wives. Counselors must help young women plan early for problems to be faced working and raising a family. Descriptors - Counseling Centers, Counseling Effectiveness, Counselor Functions, Counselor Role, Performance Factors

This article concerns a revised counselor intake system at California State College. Students previously routed by a receptionist to a counselor are now being diagnosed immediately. Problems are dealt with on the spot or referred to another counselor. This eliminates unnecessary delay, "no show" problems, wasted time, and long waiting lists. Both counselors and students report satisfaction. (KH)

Descriptors - Dropouts, Identification, Individual Characteristics, Prediction

In an effort to discover variables which predict potential dropping out as early as ninth grade, this study collected data on two groups of students in a single high school. Although the sample was limited, a fairly accurate combination was uncovered: age, IQ, arithmetic achievement and father's occupation. It is hoped that early identification will lead to retention. Descriptors - Computers, Counseling Goals, Guidance Objectives, Information Utilization, Technology

The appropriate guidance use of technology is not just one of designing machines but rather of discovering how to use technology to realize counselors' personal and societal goals in particular settings. The future of guidance could well depend on the capacity of the counseling profession to utilize technology effectively. Followed by comments by C. Descriptors - Curriculum, Health Education, Social Influences, Teamwork

Schools should offer a programmed course to orient its pupils to current developments in the field of science; a course which will generate an appreciation and awareness of existing improvements in health education. Colleges must provide a graduate level inservice course to train teachers as well as an undergraduate interdisciplinary academic course. The intent of the course would be to educate nonprofessionals about the most commonly known and frequently occurring medical problems. (Author)

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1. TERM OF CONTRACT
This order is not subject to cancellation.

2. PRICE CHANGES
Leasco Information Products Inc. (LIPCO) may at any time increase the price of any item by giving the customer thirty (30) days notice that there will be an increase. LIPCO will notify Customer of the amount of the increase not less than ten (10) days prior to the effective date. If the increase is not acceptable, Customer must terminate the affected portion of this Agreement notifying LIPCO prior to the effective date of the increase. If Customer does not so notify LIPCO the increase shall be deemed accepted and shall govern all shipments from the effective date.

3. SUBSCRIPTION PRICE AND PAYMENT
The Subscription Price paid by the standing order and special collection customers is based upon an estimate of the number of microfiche to be delivered to the Customer and the shipping cost. The Subscription Price shall be applied as a credit against the Actual Price of the microfiche. The Actual Price of the microfiche provided by LIPCO shall be determined by multiplying the actual number of microfiche delivered to the Customer by the applicable price listed in the Schedule of Prices. The Prices listed in the Schedule of Prices do not include any sales, use, excise or similar taxes which may apply to the sale of the microfiche to the Customer. The cost of such taxes, if any, shall be borne by the Customer and will be billed separately by LIPCO.

Statements will be provided periodically to inform the Customer of the number of microfiche shipped and the remaining dollar balance of the subscription.

Payment terms shall be net thirty (30) days from date of invoice. Payment shall be without expense to LIPCO.

4. PROPRIETARY INFORMATION
All materials supplied hereunder are proprietary and may not be reproduced for resale without the prior written consent of LIPCO.

5. CONTINGENCIES
LIPCO shall not be liable to Customer or any other person for any failure or delay in the performance of any obligation if such failure or delay, (a) is due to events beyond the control of LIPCO including, but not limited to, fire, storm, flood, earthquake, explosion, accident, acts of the public enemy, strikes, lockouts, labor disputes, labor shortage, work stoppages, transportation embargoes or delays, failure or shortage of materials, supplies or machinery, acts of God, or acts or regulations or priorities of the federal, state, or local governments, (b) is due to failures of performance of subcontractors beyond LIPCO's control and without negligence on the part of LIPCO, or (c) is due to erroneous or incomplete information furnished by Customer.

6. EXTENSION
The subscription packages ordered by the standing order or special collection customers shall be automatically extended at the expiration of the current designated year for successive one-year periods unless the customer shall notify LIPCO to the contrary at least 30 days prior to the commencement of each additional year.

7. LIABILITY
LIPCO's liability, if any, arising hereunder shall not exceed restitution of charges.

In no event shall LIPCO be liable for special, consequential, or liquidated damages arising from the provision of services hereunder.

8. WARRANTY
LIPCO MAKES NO WARRANTY, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, AS TO ANY MATTER WHATSOEVER, INCLUDING ANY WARRANTY OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PARTICULAR PURPOSE.

9. CHANGES
No waiver, alteration, or modification of any of the provisions hereof shall be binding unless in writing and signed by an officer of LIPCO.

10. DEFAULT AND WAIVER
A. If Customer fails with respect to this or any other agreement with LIPCO to pay any invoice when due or to accept any shipment as scheduled, LIPCO may without prejudice to other remedies defer further shipments until the default is corrected or terminate this Agreement.

B. No course of conduct nor any delay of LIPCO in exercising any right hereunder shall waive any rights of LIPCO or modify this Agreement.

11. GOVERNING LAW
This Agreement shall be construed to be between merchants. Any question concerning its validity, construction, or performance shall be governed by the laws of the State of New York.

CAPS Capsule

Our newsletter is taking on a new, shorter look! Read it to keep in touch with the publications, services, and activities of CAPS and the ERIC system.

Impact (The CAPS Journal)

If you've enjoyed CAPS Capsule in the past, plan to read Impact in the future! Our journal will feature interviews and articles on highly current topics. To this we'll add references to the latest information resources drawn from the vast array of materials that pass through our Center. A stimulating way to stay informed!

Communique: A News Sheet for School Counselors

This is a new format for ERIC/CAPS! Here is a news sheet that will identify key developments, research outcomes, and exemplary programs that are ready for use by school counselors. It will also include newsy items with particular interest for the practitioner.

Proceedings:

This new series of publications will bring to the entire CAPS audience materials and ideas generated for special CAPS staff presentations before professional groups. The first two papers are:

ERIC/CAPS at KPGA (Keynote address and ERIC/CAPS presentation at the Kentucky Personnel and Guidance Association fall conference, in Lexington, Kentucky, on October 28 and 29, 1970)

ERIC/CAPS at Western ACES (A report on the full-day workshop on "Images of Counseling in the Seventies" conducted at ACES in San Diego, on November 24, 1970)

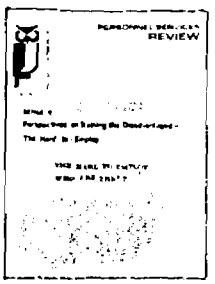
To order, see the composite order form on page 291.

These CAPS publications are still available –



PERSONNEL SERVICES REVIEWS

"Programs on Drug Use and Abuse"

Here is the first in a series of papers which survey innovative programs in school situations which have been developed in response to current societal issues. It includes an extensive bibliography of resources for developing new programs.

"Support Personnel in Guidance Programs"

This paper surveys several models for programs involving the use of paraprofessionals as an aide to professional school personnel workers, and as a link between school and community. Generalizations and implications are given.

"New Practices in Student Orientation"

This paper is a review of model programs in the areas of freshman orientation, orientation for the culturally distinct, orientation in community colleges, transfer orientation, and parent orientation.

THE REGISTER TO IMPROVE COMMUNICATIVE HABITS

RICH is a directory of people in the field of counseling and the personnel services. It lists researchers and practitioners who have indicated an interest in the exchange of ideas and materials with others who are working in the same area of interest. It includes indexes by activity and geographical areas.

To order, see the composite order form on the opposite page.
